ENG. PHYSICS TOP DOGS

High, On The Rocks!

These are the winners of the Carnival Human Dog-Team race, which was held on the front campus yesterday. Not looking at all pooped-out, these dogs are perched on top of the famous square igloo that is now decorating the campus. However, Eng Physics does not have undisputed possession of their trophy; Eng and Bus are protesting the judges decision. (see page two) —VSP by Kyselka

SPS Men Among Students Warming Up To Carnival

Mushing to victory in yesterday's human dog race the Engineering Physics team proved themselves the hardest of the student contesting outfits. With their yellow sulkey manned (dogged?) by a dozen second-year Skulermen they clocked a record 2 min. 20 sec. for the first heat. In the final dash around the igloo they successfully bypassed the frozen spectators (not used to igloo-style weather) to beat Maths and Physics, who suffered a setback when their sled lost a wheel.

The winners received the trophy from Wendy Day, one of the Carnival Queen contestants. It has been suggested that the trophy, a dog bone tied with a handsome blue ribbon, be kept in formaldehyde for next year's Carnival.

A flash announcement has been received in regard to another carnival event. Skule VII's have accepted St. Hilda's challenge to a hockey game, to be played at Caledon at 2 o'clock on Saturday. The game will be played on skates, not, as previously suggested, in rubber boots. The girls say that rules will be made up as the game progresses and warn the men to be prepared: there are all 160 lb. Amazons. St. Hilda's Ambulance will be on hand to deal with any casualties in this or other events.

Conditions at Caledon are perfect for the Carnival. A pond is being flooded to provide for the hockey and a half-mile speed race, and latest weather reports say there is plenty of snow for skiing.

The more conventional winter sports are not all the Carnival will include. Friday night there will be a square dance at the Drill Hall, with the second round of the queens' pancake-flipping contest to provide entertainment between sets. Saturday night there will be more square dancing at the farm.

And there is still the snow-sculpturing contest. To date there is only one entry: the Zeta Psi fraternity on St. George. Undeterred by the lack of snow in this metropolis they have erected a structure with ice blocks, labelled "Beer Mug". Other entries are still welcome.

The Carnival may even be a lucky break for aspiring TV stars. CBC covered the dog race, will cover all events at Caledon and probably the Friday dance as well.

So get your bus tickets now — $1.80 return, at the Grad Office in Hart House, the SAC office or the Engineering Stores. Buses leave from Hart House at 8 and 9 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday; they leave the farm at half-hour intervals between 6 and 9 p.m. both days.

Students must bring their own sports equipment, and if possible sleeping bags.

Straw Vote Upheld NFCUS Compare To WUS, Red Cross

The External Affairs Committee last night supported by a vote of 17-1 the motion that "this body indicates its feeling that Toronto should remain in the National Federation of Canadian University Students."

The vote followed an hour-long discussion of the functions, administration, and plans of NFCUS. It was a 'straw vote', informal in nature, and carries no official weight with the SAC when they meet Wednesday, Jan. 26, to decide the fate of NFCUS, and set up next year's budget.

Peter Martin, regional Vice-President, spoke, summarizing the functions which NFCUS carries on at the present time. These, briefly, are the Art Competition, the Short Story Contest, the Travel Service, the Inter-regional Exchange Scholarships, the Scholarship Campaign, the move to reduce income tax below the level of student fees, the move to reduce the cost of text-books by reducing printing costs, the publication of Hems, a weekly news bulletin of NFCUS affairs.

Gord Hurlburt, SAC NFCUS representative, stated: "I strongly feel that NFCUS will be severely — and perhaps fatally — injured if we drop out." He went on: "It is not a matter of money; it is simply a matter of whether NFCUS will stand or fall."

Bill Angus, SAC President, pointed out that the surplus from the book exchange and the increased enrollment would more than accommodate the proposed increase in fees. To the objection that the printing cost of The Varsity and Torontonensis would be increased next year, Angus said that there had been no direct indication of this, that no provision was thought of so far.

The major objections raised to NFCUS were functional in nature. Complaints about administration costs, the value of the president's travelling, and the function of the annual conference — on which $5000 were spent last year — were aired. With regard to the administration, it was pointed out that a focal point was necessary, that the officers were at a bare minimum.

But someone remarked: "If NFCUS is a bad thing, then so is World University Service, and the EAC, and the Red Cross."

The Share budget, the student exchanges, and WUS summer seminars were also discussed. It was generally felt that the Host Committee should be set up as an independent member of the SAC.

Pharmacy, Vic Reject NFCUS UC Students Voice Approval

Pharmacy turned thumbs down on NFCUS at a meeting that saw SAC letters tossed around the table and The Varsity quoted and misquoted. By a unanimous vote, the Undergraduate Society decided not to maintain NFCUS membership at 50c a head. SAC delegate R. Anco was instructed to vote against the motion at the SAC meeting next week.

The $670 out of $14,470 budgeted by NFCUS for projects was emphasized as the main failing of NFCUS. A gain in revenue of $4,000, for SAC was felt of greater benefit than $670, worth of NFCUS projects.

SAC Rep. R. Anco said, "I feel that the money could be well utilized by our own SAC to completely finance an AVR show, give support to our Symphony Orchestra and Chorus, UTDU and especially The Varsity which has had two big cuts in the last two years."

VIC

The Vic Union yesterday turned down the SAC-initiated motion regarding Toronto's membership in NFCUS by a close vote of 20-16. The decision means that Vic's vote in the next SAC meeting will be cast against Toronto continuing its membership in the National Federation at an increased fee of 50 cents.

UC LIT

The UC Lit Executive has agreed to postpone the formal vote of the SAC motion regarding NFCUS till next Wednesday. However, Martin Friedland, Lit President, stated that "the feeling of the executive is generally pro-NFCUS."

UC Women

The WUA has approved Toronto's continued membership in NFCUS.

Fri Noon Deadline For Gay Carnival

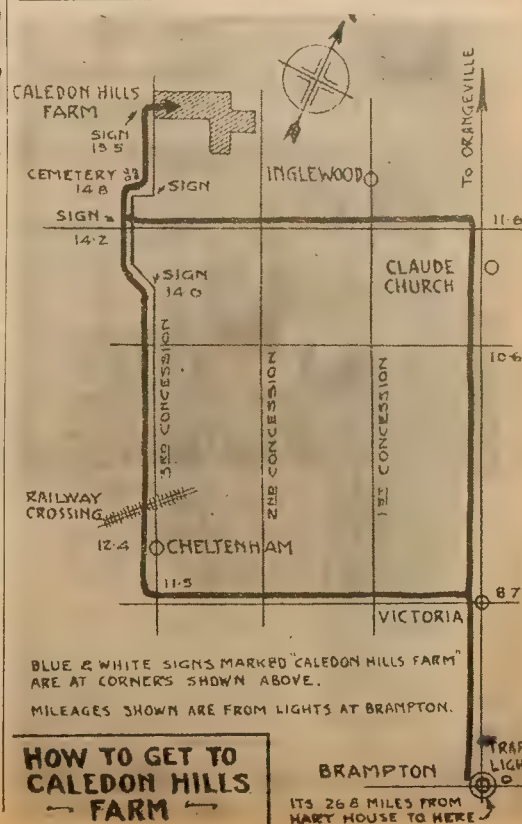

All students wishing to take part in the activities at Caledon Hills this weekend are requested to register before Friday noon. Registration forms are available in the SAC Office, the Graduate Office in Hart House, and the Engineering Stores. The Registration fee is $1.00, which is to cover the overhead costs of the carnival.

Bus tickets, which cost $1.80 each, must be purchased by Friday at 5:00 p.m. at the latest.

Registration for overnight accommodation should also be done by Friday at the latest in the Graduate Office in Hart House. The girls' overnight accommodation is already full.

What Party?

The Varsity will conduct a practical and down-to-earth survey on college drinking this Friday night. For the purposes of aiding this academic research, all Varsity staffers are asked to report to the office as soon as possible, and learn the details of this latest effort of The Varsity on behalf of TRUTH and LIGHT.

Who can go and work like hell?

NO! NO! NO!
Full of courage, brave and true,
These young men will see things through.
Hear ye! Hear ye! We of I-Eng. Bus. courageously protest ye said Verdict as of 1:40 p.m. on Wednesday, made against we uns. Enveloped by mobs of screaming, frantic "arts men?", said Eng. Bus. battled to first place in Ye Winter Carnival Dog-Sled Race — for ye glorious "Ham-Bone" Trophy.

Re that most unhappy incident about which we uns wish to protest, we feel that an injustice, unpardonable in the eyes of fair play, has been committed. We have been grievously hurt. The thoughtless error in the donation of ye said trophy to Eng. Physics must not go unnoticed.
We do not wish to be misunderstood. We do not ask that the trophy be returned to its rightful winners. We are quite content to have the Trophy remain as a symbol of shame to those dastardly rascals in Eng. Physics (not to mention the more dastardly judges and judgettes).
We do not want this sin to go completely unheeded. After concentrated consultation, it was decided that all be forgiven, providing: — the beauties (female) compensate Eng. Bus. team by offering them their undivided "companionship" for the "Skule-At-Home" on February 3, 1955.

Pertinent Facts

The Editor, The Varsity.
Here are a few pertinent, impartial facts to throw some light on the, I suspect, Varsity-promoted controversy over the Arab refugee problem. The facts are:
(1) Arab population of Palestine in April '48 — 1,100,000.
(2) Population of those portions of Palestine which remained in Arab hands; Gaza: 200,000, Samaria and Eastern Judea: 600,000 plus.
(3) Arab population of Israel, November '48 — 60,000 Balance: 240,000 Arabs left Israeli held territory.
Sources of information:
(1) Encyclopaedia Britannica Yearbook — 1949, pg. 550.
(2) Ibid — 1950, pg. 531.
(3) Ibid — 1954, pg. 384.
It is interesting to note that the Arab population of Israel (estimated June 30, 1953) had grown to 180,000. (Encyclopaedia Americana Annual — 1954, pg. 362) I would say that this is a poor attempt at the genocide referred to by Mr. Pithani.
George Marcus, III U.C.
Editors Note: No Varsity inspired controversy — it's just that there are some things people are evidently not apathetic about. The Varsity will not receive any more letters on this controversy.

Necessity

In what must be considered the strongest move in the campaign for government scholarships to date, the Scholarship Committee of the Students' Council of this university will be approaching local members of the Provincial legislature on Friday.

Here is a move, dictated not only by the nature of the British North America Act, but also by common sense. It seems only logical to focus such a campaign upon the local scene and when concessions have been granted or refused on that level, to widen it to include the higher ones.

Since the University of Toronto is obviously unable to increase the amount of money allocated to bursaries (a regrettable situation), then it is necessary to approach the provincial government.

Another strong reason for making the initial overtures to the provincial government is, that education in the province generally, and this university in particular, comes under the direct supervision of the province. Here too, the difficulties posed by the BNA Act are met.

In addition to this, there is the question of inter-provincial rivalry, through which satisfactory legislation on the part of the government will be likely to include similar legislation from other provincial governments.

It can not be doubted that this method of procedure carries with it the weight of common sense as well as a sound legal basis. In both these characteristics it compares more than favourably with earlier projects mooted and essayed by the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

We believe that it is necessary here to sound a note of warning.

Any system of government aid to education, either through bursaries or direct grants to educational institutions, has inherent dangers which must not be overlooked. As the president of this university clearly pointed out in a recent address to the Canadian Club, "If one group pays the piper, they are inevitably tempted to call the tune".

In Canada, the great difficulty is that a sense of "noblesse oblige", of successful graduates contributing on a large scale to the operation of the university or the training of students is virtually, as the president also pointed out, six percent of a university's unknown operating expense in Canada is met by endowments and only four percent by gifts.

Since this is so we have no recourse but to an appeal to the government. Such an appeal must be made with all due awareness of its weakness, but also in the overwhelming strength of its necessity.

Skule Tops UC 49-40 Patterson Goes For 14

By TOM WILLIAMS

Completely disregarding a feeble Redmen zone defence, Sr. SPS dumped Sr. UC, 49-50, in yesterday's major league basketball matinee. After overcoming an early five point deficit, the Engineers took the lead midway through the first period and were never again headed. The scores at the intermissions were 16-9 and 34-24, respectively.

In the opening minutes of a rather sloppily played first period, SPS seemed balked by the UC zone. However, two clean baskets by deep man Ojala set them rolling.

The second period featured some good shooting and ball-handling by both clubs. Boington and Floyd led a driving Skule attack, while Kelly was smooth in feeding from the outside.

UC forward, Patterson, high man in the game with fourteen, displayed a fine one hand push and a good hook in this period. Douglas worked well in the deep spot.

The final frame, in which UC held their scoring edge, 16-15, was wide open, with both teams employing the fast break effectively. Prior to this they had played it fairly cozy in moving up the floor.

Patterson again shone for the Red, along with tall Harry Wilson. Earl Ford, SPS guard, was especially effective in this stanza, stealing the ball at least twice, while checking closely. He also dumped three valuable hoops when it appeared UC might rally.

Neither team could be said to have controlled the backboards.

Both Wilson of UC and big Don Ottawa of Skule had their moments in this department. The latter, while able to grab the rebounds handily, had trouble sinking.

ing them. On one occasion he got three consecutive rebounds, but was unable to hoop.

Along with Patterson, Wilson (9) and Brock (7) were the high

Dentistry B's In First Spot After Tying Trinity B's 3-3

By SHELDON TAERK

Despite a shortage of manpower, the Dentistry B's vaulted into sole possession of first place in the Group IV standings, on the strength of a 3-3 tie with the third place Trinity B's in yesterday's only skirmish at Varsity Arena.

Trailing 3-2 with thirty-eight seconds left in the contest, Jerry Halbert, the game's individual standout, skirted his own net and carried the full length of the rink before passing to MacDonald who fired the puck past a dazzled goaltender.

The Dentists opened the scoring just after the five-minute mark when Shaw got the first of his two goals. This goal was also set up by Halbert and Shaw's waisthigh drive gave the Maroon and Blue a 1-0 lead. Trinity then struck back with two goals which were forty-three seconds apart.

Pete Butler and Smith did the honors for the Red and Black.

Dents tied it for the first time when Shaw bagged his second marker just thirty-nine seconds after the final period started. Trinity, with less than two minutes to go, broke the deadlock as Smith, scoring his second goal, blasted a low shot by the Dentistry netminder to wrap up the game, or so it seemed. This set the stage for Halbert to feed MacDonald the equalizer which put the Dentists one point up on the second place SPS V's, in their group.

The game was exceptionally well played despite the shortage of players for Dents who had but three reserves. One penalty was called and no damage was done while Deacon went off for Trinity midway in the first period.

Poster Contest Ends January 21

The "Brigadoon" poster contest will close this Friday, January 21, announced the publicity committee today. Prizes offered to the winners will be a recording given by the Promenade Music Shop, a tartan plaid tam and scarf set donated by the Rob Roy Shop, and a welkit from Eaton's.

The contest is open to all members of the University not connected with the show. The main criterion to be judged of the poster is how well it captures the particular spirit of the musical. Other deciding factors will be originality of design, neatness, and excellence of art work. Entries may be done on poster paper or any stiff surface in any medium. They should be a minimum of one foot by a foot and one half. Entries should be labelled on the back with the contestant's name, year, and faculty and turned into the Lit. Office at U.C.

Runneth-Over

By CHAS. HUMPHRIES

Syracuse, N.Y. — Syracuse University students are requested not to run naked through the streets of downtown Syracuse. The Daily Orange reports that a university spokesman said that "this is a direct violation of University rules."

Any students apprehended will be severely reprimanded.

Lamar, Texas. — The Honourary Degree of PHT is offered at Lamar State College of Technology for wives of graduating students. The HT (Putting Husband Through) degree is presented by the Industrial Engineers Club.

Denver, Colo. — The Flatiron, college humour magazine at the University of Colorado, was recently suspended by university officials who claimed that it "debases student morals through pointless allusions to sex and alcohol." The suspension order termed the magazine "unworthy of being published under the name of the University of Colorado."

The editor of the Flatiron commented, "We don't rely on sex and alcoholism. We try to appeal to all sorts of students."

Vancouver, B.C. — McCarthyism the "movement", not McCarthy the "man", influences American politics today, according to Lt. Herbert Rosenblum, Jewish army chaplain at Fort Lewis, Washington, when he discussed the McCarthy problem at Hillel House.

Rosenblum described the evolution of the movement from the controversial campaigns launched by Senator McCarthy in 1950 against the influx of communists in American public life.

"McCarthyism is the symbol of insecurity and human weakness on a national scale. In theory, it is the desire of unrealistic factions in the country to attain a goal regardless of the means," he said.

"The McCarthy investigations, although they did not succeed in indicting a single communist, did make the people more aware of their presence in public life," he added.

Rosenblum weighed opposite this "positive" value the mass hysteria directed against innocent people who became victims of its unwarranted attacks.

Nichols to Judge Art Competition

Mr. Jack Nichols will be the judge of the NFCUS Art Competition to be held this year at Toronto, announced Peter Lewis, Chairman of the contest. The exhibition of the art submitted from students all across Canada will be held in Hart House from January 31 to February 4.

Lewis said that to date the response to the call for entries for the competition from this campus "had not been particularly satisfactory." There is no charge for entering, but the deadline is January 26.

Lewis said that Mr. Nichols, the judge for the competition, is a young Canadian artist whose reputation has been steadily growing since his first show in 1941. He was official war artist for the Canadian Navy in the European Theatre, and has held a Guggenheim fellowship. Mr. Nichols, said Lewis, has done considerable research on mural painting and lithography, the two art forms which interest him the most.

The NFCUS Story

By GORDON HURLBURT
SAC, NFCUS Chairman

This is the fourth in a series.

NFCUS this year has mandated McGill to promote a short story contest and Queen's to do further work on presenting the case for student exemption from income tax. This article will briefly present the work done on both of these mandates.

The short story contest will be conducted first on this campus. When your NFCUS committee has received all the stories, two or at the most three will be sent on to McGill. The contest will be concluded here by February 15th. Three prominent men of letters will review the stories which have been sent in from camps all across Canada. The best story will be published in Liberty magazine in its April 1st edition, and the winner will receive remuneration at the prevailing rate. The second prize is $50. cash.

Queen's are working on an income tax exemption program at the present time whereby a taxable University student will be allowed to add to his allowable tax exemption the amount of his tuition and in the case of a tax exempt university student, his or her guardian may be allowed to add to his or her exemption the amount of the university student's tuition.

In conjunction with this a statistical survey of students social and economical status was carried out by the McMaster and Carleton College N.F.C.U.S. committees aided by the Dominion department of labour. This will be printed and distributed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Press—Democracy's Friend or Foe?

"The Press leads the crowd after finding out where it wants to go." This comment, last night, proved to be one of the key points of the panel discussion, held at Trinity College by the Corporation of Trinity. It was presented this year, for the first time, in conjunction with the College Society.

The guest speaker in the discussion was Mr. J. B. McGeachie, associate editor of the Globe and Mail and a frequent broadcaster on radio and T.V. To the above quotation Mr. McGeachie replied that the main function of the newspaper was to give unbiased information on all subjects, but he felt that editorial comments on the editorial page were a duty.

He later added that a paper should be "spiced with good fun."

Other speakers in the discussion were Dr. P. A. Child, Canadian novelist and a member of the Trinity English staff, and Dr. J. B. Beare, the renowned New Testament scholar, Douglas Hill, the editor of the Trinity College Review, and Martin Hunter, editor of the Sal Terrae. The two editors of both Trinity papers denied during the discussion that their papers printed what their readers wanted.

The panel discussed the limitations of the Press, the influence of radio on newspapers, sensationalism, and other aspects of today's press. In reply to a comment from the floor that the press was "slaughtering" our language, Mr. McGeachie replied that the young reporters today had been trained by the contemporary English teachers.

BUCK BRAVES HECKLERS

Communist Spokesman

Tim Buck, recognized leader of the Labor-Progressive Party in Canada, is seen addressing a meeting in the Economics Building last night. Ushers checked all those entering the hall to make sure they possessed ATL Cards. Several persons not having cards were turned away from the meeting.

ATL Cards Only Pass As Co-existence Urged

Tim Buck last night took up the case of Canadian university students and universities, relating the current educational crisis (including lack of scholarships and flunking of first-year engineers) to Canada's economic set-up. ATL cards were examined before admittance to the meeting and all press representatives except THE VARSITY and all non-students were barred from the meeting.

In front of a heckling, restive audience in the Economics Building he called for more scholarships better financing of universities, improvement of facilities and provision of opportunities for graduates through development of Canadian industry.

He charged that our governexhaustable" markets in the Iron Curtain countries.

If we don't do this we will be puppets of the United States, dependent on their "boom or bust economy, and forced to follow their policy of German rearmament," he said.

In conclusion Tim Buck called for peaceful coexistence as the only alternative to hydrogen-bomb disaster. By coexistence he stated we can help east European countries and our own develop together and provide careers for our young, security for our old.

When asked to name outstanding western warmongers Buck cited Foster Dulles and, to a lesser degree, Admiral Radford, General McArthur and George Drew.

The whole meeting was accompanied by castanets, catcalls and boos despite the opening plea for a quiet meeting. Hecklers interrupted Buck many times; for instance, when he spoke of Russia's "tremendous" increase in coal production, someone cried "By Women?"

In closing with a quotation by Walter Lipman, Tim Buck said "that the Russians . . ." "are coming," supplied a backrow heckler.

A effort to suppress the heckling was made by the janitor, who after several appeals to culture pleaded "Don't be like the Russians."

Rumour

Late last night a rumour was circulating the campus that Tim Buck had been shot in the shoulder after his address in the Economics Building by a BB pellet. It was stated that a U. of T. student had fired the shot.

As far as can be learned, this rumour is completely baseless. A student later admitted to The Varsity that he had started this story "just as a gag".

ment is deliberately curtailing opportunities for graduates by restricting industrial development, and quoted C. D. Howe, Federal Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, he said, threatened Canadian companies with fiscal penalties if they tried to exploit our raw materials.

As a countermeasure Tim Buck proposed increased industrialization with sale to the "almost in-

Who Won War of 1812? England Unaware of It

Upper Canada was rescued by the British regulars — mainly peasants from Ireland — in the War of 1812, said Col. C. P. Stacey of the Military's Historical Section, Ottawa, last night at the Modern History Club.

Part of General Brock's deserved greatness lay in the fact that he took the offensive although the population's morale was bad. Col. Stacey disagreed with the legend that the militia was responsible for repelling the Americans and stated that there were as many regular troops in Canada as in the American army at that time.

In what he termed "a second look at the War of 1812", he noted that its outcome had a different meaning to each side — the United States and Canada both claimed victory and England was unaware that it had occurred.

The main consequence of the war was the impression that it made on the population. "The Upper Canadians came out of the war far more British than when they went into it."

William Lyon Mackenzie did not live through it and Col. Stacey suggested that "if Mackenzie had come to Canada ten years earlier, he might never have rebelled." The United States might have been able to quietly absorb Upper Canada very soon if they had not blundered by attempting to take it by force. But since Upper Canada had "had a far harder time than Britain ever had in the Napoleonic Wars at the same time," the war "made a large mark upon the mentality of Toronto and took a long time to work it off."

An indirect result of the war was the founding of the Toronto General Hospital with extra funds from the society for the distress of those injured by the American destruction.

U.S. College Enrolment Rising Billions Required for Building

University of Cincinnati President, covered 846 colleges.

The figures show an increase of 6.8% in full time student enrollment and 9.7% in part time students over last year's statistics. The reporting institutions have a total of 1,383,750 full time students and 1,895,280 students of all sorts.

The largest university in the U.S.A. — from the standpoint of full-time students — was California, with 35,273. New York State University and Minnesota were the next largest. Toronto has less than 10,000 full-time students.

The faculties showing the biggest gains are education, engineering, commerce, and arts in that order.

An estimate by Time magazine says that $3,570,000,000 will be required by U.S. Colleges before 1960 for new construction.

Tickets Now are Selling For Figaro's Marriage

By ANN STARK

The advance sale of tickets for this year's Opera Festival began this week. Three operas are being presented in this sixth annual season — Die Fledermaus, Marriage of Figaro, and La Traviata — in a series of sixteen performances beginning February 25th.

La Traviata is new in the Opera Festival Company's repertoire, and is the only one to be presented in Italian. It will be conducted by Maestro Ernesto Barbini with the accustomed skill which he has exhibited in the past two years. Patricia Snell and Marcella Reale are alternating in the exacting role of Violetta. James Milligan and Jon Vickers are two other well known artists appearing in La Traviata.

Orders for preferred seats for the Festival are available to students and staff of the university through their SAC representatives, or in the SAC office. The Opera Festival brings together an impressive collection of Canadian first-raters — young, talented and destined for great things. All presentations are being given new, expertly conceived sets, specially designed and colourful costumes. Herman Geiger-Torel is responsible for the new and dramatic stage direction which promises to make this sixth festival a memorable one. Nicholas Goldschmidt, musical director of the company, will conduct the English operas.

This will be the company's first presentation of Die Fledermaus in its original form. Previously, Rosolinda, the streamlined version was given, and it met with great success. Jean Ramsay has come from Winnipeg to sing Rosolinda. Jon Vickers and Karl Norman will sing Alfred, and familiar members of the company such as Evelyn Gould, Don Gerrard, and Joanne Ivey will fill other starring roles.

The advance sale of tickets ends on the campus Friday, February fourth.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL — Once more the touring Cambridge debating team has defended the British Empire successfully. Queen's University, like Toronto, upheld the resolution: "Resolved that the British Empire is declining. Let it fall." This looks like the best publicity Britain has had for a long time.

The January Blues have hit Queen's, too. Christmas exam results are out — and first year Arts marks are lower than expected 19 out of 213 passed Philosophy. But, philosophizes Professor Duncan, "the failure of the others is merely due to a lack of knowledge." Is there any better way to fail an exam?

Another professor thought the near-success of the Golden Gaels last fall may have distracted people from their studies. I wonder what would have happened if they had won!

SASKATOON — The National NFCUS Executive has announced that the 1955 Conference will be held in Edmonton. The National NFCUS President, Doug Burns, has also announced that Saskatchewan will be the host for this year's World University Service Conference.

Northern Literary Review Editor Also Student on Toronto Campus

Mr. John Sutherland, Editor of the Northern Literary Review, has embarked on a new role as a student at the University of Toronto. He has come here to complete work for a degree, and is registered at St. Michael's College.

In an interview with the Varsity today, Mr. Sutherland discussed the early years of the Review, during which it was extremely nationalistic, publishing chiefly Canadian works. Mr. Sutherland is now concerned with producing a cosmopolitan rather than a nationalistic magazine. He said: "I don't think we should profess interest in Canadian writing for any other reason other than its merit, and its ability to stand on its own feet."

It should be judged by the same standard by which we judge English and American work. In aiding the development of Canadian literature there is no point in "sparing the rod and spoiling the child."

The Northern Review contains chiefly literary criticisms, poems and short stories. The work of many prominent American writers is often featured, including that of the leader of new con-

The government went down to defeat Tuesday night in the Legislative Assembly. The issue at stake was universal Military Training, and the occasion was the Annual Student Parliament of the Osgoode Hall Legal and Literary Society.

The motion before the debating Osgoode students was: "Whereas is desirable to build a sound basis for good citizenship, to provide for the defence of Canada and to enable Canada to carry out her commitments as a world power, be it resolved that this House approves, in principle, of the establishment of a system of Universal Military Training and that a Parliamentary Committee be appointed to consider the details of such a system and to report back to this House." The motion which was defeated by a vote of 46 to 45, was put forward by a Progressive Conservative government, with the CCF forming the official Opposition. Representative of the Liberal and Union National Parties also took part.

Prime Minister Henry S. Polak, II, speaking in support of the motion, said that some had criticized it as an attempt to raise a dead issue, but, he said, "I believe that the question of universal military training is very much alive." He stated that it was necessary if Canada were to fulfill her responsibilities in the world. He felt, also, that adequate training is only fair to those who would fight in the next war, to give them a chance for survival.

Marvin Gordon, I, Leader of the Opposition, opposed the motion by saying that it threatened the unity of Canada, as the French Canadians would never support it. He advocated, instead, the sending of arms and equipment to Europe, and a larger contribution to the Colombo Plan.

Liberal Leader, Tom Cormery, II, criticized the motion as "cowardly and contemptible . . . indicative of a disregard of facts typical of the Conservatives." J. M. Monk, also speaking for the Liberals, warned that passing of the motion would split the country "racially, linguistically and geographically."

Students Meet MLA's For Bursary Campaign

NFCUS representatives will meet members of the Ontario Legislature on Friday.

The meeting will be an informal discussion of NFCUS proposals for a federal scholarship and bursary program designed to give five million dollars in annual aid to ten thousand university students.

Local members of the Dominion Parliament were approached at a meeting last November.

The purpose of these meetings is to enlist both federal and provincial support when a brief outlining the scholarship problems is presented to Parliament in February.

Under the direction of the Toronto branch of NFCUS, similar campaigns are being conducted in all provinces.

Norm Chalmers, NFCUS Scholarship Chairman, said that the campaign for aid to students was meant to influence all levels of government. He said that students would be glad to receive help from any government that was willing to extend it.

NFCUS Story

By GORDON HURLBURT

This fifth and last article will mention two mandates presently being carried out by the NFCUS and also introduce a new project to be discussed at the NFCUS Regional Conference to be held here shortly.

A survey has just been completed by Carleton College working with the Dominion Department of Labour into the aid given to university students. This will be printed and distributed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Debating this year is being handled by Carleton College in Ottawa. First regional trials will be held, and then group finals will be run off. The winners of each group from across Canada will debate against each other for the opportunity of a free trip to Europe and a cash award of $200. The topic for the National Debating Final is "Resolved that Canada should have a program of universal Military Training."

The project to be discussed at the Ontario NFCUS Regional Conference is called "SDS"—student discount service. By this, the NFCUS committee on each campus will line up merchants willing to give discounts to students, and then print and distribute discount cards. The advantage of this system is that the cards could be used nationally, and hence, could be used by the student wherever he should travel.

Vox Populi

We would like to place the NFCUS question in as accurate a light as possible and with as few extraneous considerations as possible.

At last year's NFCUS conference in the fall of 1953 it was decided by the national federation in plenary session to raise the membership fees to 50c per student. At that time, the office of full-time national president was introduced, and his salaries and expenses added to the expenditure of the organization.

On the basis of that decision, and complemented by the need within the SAC for increased revenue, an appeal was made to the Board of Governors for an increase in the fees paid to the SAC by the individual students on this campus.

Last June that appeal was refused by the Board of Governors on the grounds that it was necessary to effect economies in all spheres of operation at this university.

As a result of that decision, it was necessary to draft a new budget for the SAC on the basis of the old $5.00 fee. Such a budget simply did not permit the SAC to remain members of the national federation at the 50c rate. Not only that, but severe restrictions in the SAC budget were necessitated. The Symphony Orchestra and Chorus, debating, and The Varsity were among the organizations whose budgets were cut. This marked the third consecutive cut in The Varsity's budget and reduced The Varsity budget to a level unparalleled since 1920.

At the NFCUS conference last fall, it was decided that the University of British Columbia would have to resign from NFCUS until next year when it would be able to pay its increased fee. Manitoba and Toronto were given until January 31, 1955 to find ways and means of raising the additional money.

The University of Manitoba was able to get a fee raise of 50c from their Board of Governors. On the basis of that raise they have voted to pay the extra 30c per student required to bring their NFCUS fees in line with those decided upon by the 1953 conference.

At this university, this situation does not hold. The Board of Governors refused the original request of the students and a new one has not been made.

Attempts are being made to budget for the increased NFCUS fee on the basis of very tenuous and uncertain increases in income.

It is true that Simcoe Hall has said that it expects the enrollment of students paying SAC fees to reach 8600 next year. That would be an increase of 700 over the number upon which this year's budget was devised. Of this extra $3500 dollars, $2800 dollars would be required to meet the extra NFCUS fee. $700 would be left as an operating surplus out of a total budget of $43,000. It is also possible that a situation similar to the one in 1952-53 could arise where the enrollment was considerably below that predicted by Simcoe Hall.

Some discussion has arisen over surplus assets from the Book Exchange. An amount of money varying from $1000 to $1500 is unclaimed from the Book Exchange each year. This money has been placed in the reserve or sinking fund. It is now planned to take this money after a period of years and devote it to current expenditures. The use of reserve funds for the maintenance of current expenses is a practice to be avoided in all but the most desperate of instances.

It has been estimated that about $1500 dollars will be required to meet the regular increases in salaries accruing to the permanent employees of the SAC. The printing trade has in the last year received wage increases amounting to about 8% which will mean a probable 5% increase in printing costs of the Torontensis and The Varsity.

There is clearly no alternative. NFCUS at 50c cannot be maintained on the present SAC fees. It is highly doubtful if the SAC itself can remain out of the red on its present budget.

To fulfill its obligations to the students of this university, and of Canada through the national federation, the SAC must have an increase in its fees. The students have spoken before on this subject and their voice must be heeded.

I would like to comment on last Wednesday's article concerning financial assistance to increase Canada's University attendance. The writer points out that more Americans attend University than do Canadians, and that since both standards of living are approximately equal we should each have the same College attendance.

However, the fallacy in this argument is that the average factory worker in Canada makes $59 per week whereas his American counterpart earns $76 and often supplements this with a another $25 from a second job. In addition to this it is considerably cheaper to live in the U.S.

Lastly, a fact which is most embarrassing to Canadians, is that we are not as productive as our friends to the South. Recently an eastern

Voluptuous Masses or Whimsical Form

The Editor,
The Varsity.

With reference to the Editorial of Jan. 10/55 titled Willing Dupes, I feel justified in spitting out, graciously, a few of my ideas on the ideal of the female form; also, the writer bemoans the realization that little or nothing has been written on "the art work itself" from the critical point of view. But, my dear sir, you fall into a rut by criticizing only one iota of the whole — the choice of subject matter, theme — namely, the shapely contours of the human forms.

Since we are bound to have nudes, let us not have only those "suggested" overflowing, voluptuous masses of reclining adipose tissue, which ornament Ruben's masterpieces and which appeal mainly to the male's "mental" and "realistic" eye, but, let us also have the slender, graceful, delicate, whimsical, almost angelic beautiful forms of Coughtree and Snow. (However, I am inclined to suggest slimmer hips and thighs.)

I am sorry that the author of the article has not stretched his cerebellum by a few millimetres — for, obviously the writer seems to follow a rigid, narrow path — namely, that some of the paintings are experimentations with form and possess the remarkable attribute of the omission of all lines.

I make no pretensions of attempting to cram or superimpose my personal views on anyone, nor is my aim "to struggle with tastes" for this or that type of art, for this is an entirely personal and private privilege of every being, but Sir!

A hint, Mr. Batten: Don't gaze too deeply into the fathomless, ethereal, turquoise eyes of Coughtree's nudes — they may intoxicate and enchant you to the point where you may get to like or perhaps even love them! You might even recognize their nymphish divine virtues!

I read in your rag that you people were having a bit of trouble, whether or not to stay in some association or other, N.O.C.P.S. or something and I thought maybe you could help us out a bit up here in Podunk Corners. Yew see, we gentlemen organized the Cass County Public Schools into a federation last year to promote something, or unite something; I forget which now, but it don't matter much anyhow. Anyway, we charged each student 17c each for membership dues, but we had trouble getting them to cough up, so we hired a professional collectors agency. They collected all right, $178., but their bill was $200., so we raised the fees by another 8c per.

Nobody liked that much and somebody accidental threw a brick through the head office window, so we raised the fees another 3c. Well the collectors got the 8c all right but they didn't get the 3c and after we paid a few students' hospital bills, we still didn't have no money but for 34c so we bought a pack of gapers and a smoke and called it a year.

Now these ingrates are trying to back out of our group! How do you like that! Well, anyways, I thought maybe you could send them a

The NFCUS Question

Are you in favour of Toronto Students Maintaining their Membership in NFCUS at the Possible Expense of Their Own Activities?

Against and...

Nothing Concrete

No, I feel that for far too long NFCUS has taken the money of the students of Canada without showing them any concrete returns. It is significant that the only persons who are in favour of NFCUS are those who are immediately connected with the administrative and the "conference-attending" aspect of its activities. This indicates that NFCUS has offered nothing of interest or of value to the students of Canada as a body.

Barry Watson,
IV Maths and Physics

No Expense

Not at the expense of their own activities. Surely we can help to strengthen the Federation while still retaining our individuality? Why should we have to pay an expense?

Doug Allen,
I Trinity

Not the Orchestra!

No, if it means cutting the expenses of the U of T orchestra which is a decided step in the direction of cultural development and the Caledon weekends which play an important part in assisting Anglo-French relationships in Canada. The contribution to NFCUS should be separate and voluntary.

A Bazaar?

If retaining NFCUS means curtailing student activities and the cutting down of the funds available to The Varsity then I am opposed. On the other hand NFCUS seems a good idea, although I am not aware that it has achieved positive results. To make the best of both worlds why not hold a bonanza bazaar and make all kinds of money?

Open Alternative

No, if it means curtailing such activities as Caledon Hills and the Orchestra, and other positive activities of concrete value, for the nebulous advantages of NFCUS. By giving a negative answer I hope that it will open the way for alternative solutions — i.e. fee raise by the Governors or a re-constitution of NFCUS.

If it is detrimental to other important university activities financially (which it apparently is) it would be ridiculous to maintain the membership.

It Can Be...

YES! NFCUS helps students at this and other universities to look beyond their own narrow local boundaries, and God knows we here at Toronto do little enough of this. I consider the relation of Canadian University Students to I.U.S. and other international organizations to be of far more importance than Blue and White Society activities and similar functions of SAC. NFCUS represents Canadian students to the world, and can be an efficient and extremely important focal point of relationships between students on campus across this country and students elsewhere.

Unfair!

The question posed is highly unfair. With the addition of the $1,400 from the SAC Book Exchange, SAC activities will be expanded, not curtailed. Anyway, the average Canadian University student has had his NFCUS fee increase saved many times over by NFCUS projects.

YES! If they don't the 'expense of their own activities' may rise considerably. Frankly, I don't think we can afford (literally) to drop out. You can't accomplish anything in an organization you have left.

Reduced travel costs for students, overseas tours and projects such as scholarship campaign are ways of saving money for students in Canada.

A student who lives more than thirty miles from his university makes that fifty cents back on one return fare home. The rest is profit.

The Students' Answer

"NFCUS?"

This survey conducted by The Varsity showed the vast majority of students questioned were opposed to Toronto continuing its membership in NFCUS if there was a possibility that other student activities would be cut. Students said, by about a 3-1 ratio, that the sacrifice was not worth it to remain in the National Federation of Canadian University Students at the increased fee of 50c per student.

The opinions of those in favor of Toronto's remaining a member of NFCUS generally expressed an ill-defined but nevertheless strongly felt need for Toronto students to keep in some sort of touch with other students in Canada and elsewhere. Attention was also drawn to the achievements of NFCUS in the past, and the hopes that were held for it in the future.

Those opposed to NFCUS can be divided into two groups of about equal strength. One half feels quite strongly that NFCUS is worthless. They express contempt for the talkative "campus politicians" who, they claim, dominate the organization.

The other half of those opposed to NFCUS did not express any antipathy towards the organization itself, but they feel that the value of NFCUS was not such as to justify any possible cut in local student affairs. They too felt some sort of need for a national organization, but thought on the whole that local student projects could give the student more for his money.

There is also the question as to whether or not Toronto's continued membership in NFCUS at the increased fee of 50 cents will actually cut student activities.

SAC Finance Commissioner Al Walden stated in Tuesday's Varsity that the increased NFCUS fee would in fact hamper local student activities next year, and in any case the money could be used to greater advantage locally.

In Wednesday's Varsity SAC President Angus said that added revenues had been found for the SAC next year that would enable the SAC to both expand its own activities and remain in NFCUS.

However the main body of students have not changed their opinion much from last year when The Varsity took another survey on the question. They are still apathetic.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Just the other day we were wondering how it came to be that Queen's University, who used to be a power in Intercollegiate hockey circles, dropped out of senior competition. The Gaels, who even went so far as to present the trophy that is the object of the Blues' quest each winter, played in the senior league up until the advent of the Second World War.

Now we find a note in a recent edition of the Queen's Journal which relates the sad story of the Gaels' path in Intercollegiate hockey wars. This year the Tricolor have dropped out of the Ottawa-St. Lawrence circuit in which they have played for several past seasons, and have engaged themselves in a home-and-home series with the Western Mustangs, OAC and the Varsity Intermediates. According to the Journal story, this move was made by the Queen's Athletic Board of Control with an eye to eventually getting back into Senior Intercollegiate competition.

In view of the fact that Western seems to have come up with a better than average team this year, having edged the Baby Blues 5-4 in London Wednesday night, the thought came to us that it would be a good thing to see both Queen's and Western admitted to the league. There's no doubt that the present set-up is a rather unwieldy one. With three of the four teams all operating within a reasonable radius of each other in the province of Quebec, it is costly and awkward for the Blues to compete in the leagues. As a result of the present set-up, the Blues are forced to make three trips to the east each season, playing doubleheaders each time. At least two of these jaunts are fairly hard to take, playing a game on Friday night, and then spending most of the next day on a train en route between Quebec City and Montreal. The saving grace this season is that the Blues are good enough to withstand the pressure of such a schedule, but this has not always been the case in past years.

If Queen's and Western were admitted, it would be quite easy to split the league into two divisions, with Varsity, Western, and Queen's operating in the Western bracket, and McGill, Laval, and the Carabins playing in the Eastern group. Such a schedule would eliminate those long expensive weekends in Quebec although it's also liable to take away the color that always comes to Varsity Arena when the French Universities are visiting. However, if the two groups were to play an interlocking schedule it would cut out the present plan where the Blues play four games with each of the other teams in the loop. A six-team league would mean a ten-game schedule for the Blues, two shorter than the present one, and would leave more time for exhibition games with top American Universities as well as ranking OHA clubs.

Queen's are apparently on the road to moving back into senior competition, and it looks like Western could do the same thing. The only trouble up in London at the present moment is the lack of a suitable ice surface, something that's pretty hard to believe possible in an Ontario city when dozens of the smaller ones like Barrie, Cobourg, and Port Hope have artificial surfaces almost as big as the Maple Leaf Gardens. Considering how J. W. Little Memorial Stadium was built, it is likely that Western could have an Arena too if enough interest was shown on the campus.

A Home In Montreal . . .

. . . would be a tough thing for Western's John Metras to find if and when he takes over as McGill's Athletic Director and Head Football coach. A home, that is, where the neighbors wouldn't stone him for what his Mustangs have done to past tribes of Redmen. In this corner we have a great respect for J. P. Metras and we find it hard to believe that he would vacate his position in London to move to Montreal. Last night, while we were thinking about this week-old issue that has strangely enough died out in a tremendous hurry, we got a call from our old friend One-Eyed Benny, who was just passing through, and "thought he'd check up on the Blues."

"Do you think Metras will take McGill's offer seriously?" we asked the sage.

"I am thinking old J. P. will be in London for a long while yet," said Benny, in that all-knowing tone of his.

"But he's supposed to be unhappy there these days," we said.

"You forget, my son, that old J. P. is being an institution in London," replied Benny. "If he is leaving the place it will crumble into ruins as an athletic power."

With that the wise old man departed and we're inclined to echo his opinion. Metras said he hadn't been approached directly, and it's likely that if he is he'll soon forget about it.

From the Blue Room . . . Cressy McCatty's Blue swimming team trips to London this weekend for a meet with Western, while Kirk Wipper's wrestlers are slated for action on the same bill . . . The Blue boxers will be in Montreal to meet McGill . . . Meanwhile the hockey Blues face a tough double-header with Laval and the Carabins. Two wins would almost mean the championship and the Green Og bursts with confidence in his latest prediction. "We'll flex 'em right out of the Coliseum," says he. What about Montreal Og.

Mustangs Edge Seconds On Third Period Goal

By FRED GRAY

London, Jan. 20 (Staff)—In their roughest tilt to date the Varsity Intermediate hockey squad dropped a 5-4 decision to the Western Mustangs in London last night. Outplayed for the first half of the game the heavier Mustang club trailed until the final period and only netted the winner in the last minute of play.

Toronto carried play for most of the first period but seemed unable to score. Crook in the Western net turned in a solid performance which combined with the Varsity forwards' inaccurate shooting held the Intermediates to a single goal. Ian Morrison notched the counter, Tom Riley collecting the assist, as the Blue and White led 1-0 after the opening period.

Toronto and Western traded scoring punches throughout the second period White from Maltby tying the score for the Mustangs in the opening minutes of play.

Ted Lotocki came back to give Varsity the lead, sinking Herb Tilson's pass for the score. White scored unassisted to tie the game but Tilson returned seconds later to hand the lead back to Varsity, also scoring unassisted. Collins from White for Western again tied the score but with Lotocki's second goal of the period, again from Tilson, the Intermediates left the ice at the end of the frame leading by a single point.

In the closing period the Mustangs seemed to catch their second wind and carried play more to the Toronto end. Lindsay scored from Pond at the mid-point of the period and this goal inspired the Mustangs to their best hockey of the night in the final ten minutes. The Varsity defence led by Barry

Big Hoop Night at Varsity Lawrence, Osgoode Visiting

It's to be a night of top-flight basketball in the Hart House gymnasium tomorrow night when the Blues and their Juniors, the Baby Blues, meet some excellent opposition. The Lawrence Institute of Technology, a team that finished up their last season with a 24-5 record, counting among their victories several over the best teams in the Intercollegiate League, play the Varsity Seniors while the Baby Blues take on the men of Osgoode Hall.

The expected return to action for this game of tallish Art Binnington will reinforce the Blues down the centre and under the backboards, where they surely will need strengthening against this Lawrence club. Though in average height the Teachers have no outstanding edge over the Blues they do have several extremely tall men, who are likely to win things on the rebounds for the visitors. With Binnington back, the Blues will have Marv Tile and Alf Vaichulis to set in under the hoop with Fawcett, Potter and Leo Madden to handle the working of the ball around the outside.

Beginning to look sharp in their work-outs, the Blues have the schedule, less one game—that in which they defeated the Mac Marauders—yet ahead of them and it is possible that they are now starting a march to their peak form. The game tomorrow will serve as a preview for next Wednesday's encounter on the Hart House court with Macmen again the visitors. Though generally favoured to lose the game against the Tech Club, the Blues could provide an upset.

Polo Blues Top West End Y's

Varsity's Water Polo Blues renewed action in the Ontario Junior League Wednesday night after dropping the Intercollegiate championship to McGill in a home-and-home series before the Christmas holidays.

Playing the West End Y. the Blues came through with a 12-4 victory, their first this season in Ontario competition. Mandel was the big gun for the Blues, potting six goals, while Len Rambus scored two. Kosoy, Lyons, and Aplin each notched one for the Varsity club.

Quarrington pulled a hat-trick for the West Enders, while Holthe Kirken had two and Verth one. The Blues will continue their winning ways with several more games in this league, although they have already lost to the Hamilton Aquatic club in an exhibition game early in December.

Hockey Blues Play Laval Tonight Carabins Tomorrow in Verdun

Jack Kennedy's hockey Blues invade Quebec City tonight in the midst of that town's Winter Carnival celebrations for a scheduled league game with the Red and Gold sextet from Laval University. It's pretty likely that there'll be even wilder celebrations on the ice of the Quebec Coliseum when the Blues tangle with Laval in a renewal of the feud they started last week at Varsity Arena when the locals emerged the victors by a 12-7 margin.

Laval, now sitting deep in the league cellar without a win in four starts, should be fair game for the well-polished Blue club, who are well in front of the league with four wins in the same number of games. The big first line of Dave Reid, Paul Knox, and Clare Fisher will be out to increase their scoring totals, expanded at the expense of Laval last week in Toronto. Reid is currently leading the race with eight goals and five assists in the four league games for thirteen points, and also has the highest number of goals. Knox is in second spot with ten points while Dave Stephen is in third with eight. Stephen and Dave Jackson, with seven assists apiece, are the league's best playmakers. Fisher is right behind the leaders with seven points.

Tomorrow the Blues return to Verdun for their second meeting with University of Montreal Carabins. Currently in third place, just two points behind the rejuvenated McGill Redmen, the Carabins are not likely to give the Blues much trouble either. However the task of enduring the better part of the day spent on the train between Quebec and Montreal could leave the Blues in weakened condition to face the Carabins.

The way the league standings are developing, if the McGill Redmen continue the pace they have set in their last two league games, the last third of the schedule is going to be very interesting. Although the Blues defeated them 9-1 in their first meeting this season, the Varsity club play McGill in three of the last four games. By that time it is likely that the Redmen will be in second place about two points behind the Blues, and since that last encounter the McGillians have undergone considerable renovation. Freshman Alan Wong has replaced Henry Lafleur in the nets, while Coach Robillard has apparently ruled the riot act to the rest of the club. McGill defeated Laval 6-1, last week.

After this doubleheader Verdun in old Quebec the Blues return to Toronto for three home games in a row before hitting the road again. The University of Montreal Carabins will be visitors next Friday night, and then the following week. Then McGill Redmen make their appearance of the season on February 11, in the Blues' second last home game.

Irish Whitewash Vic 6-0 In Penalty-studded Game

Oh, a referee's life is a very merry life. Yes siree, but not for me!

Both Dave Stephen and Carl Yakimoff were giving serious consideration to the peace and quiet of a retired life after yesterday's hockey action, which saw St. Mike's whitewash Sr. Vic, in a penalty-studded encounter, 6-0.

Stephen summed it up when he remarked, "They could have sold tickets to that game."

And indeed, despite the one-

By TOM WILLIAMS

sideness of the score, the game was exciting from start to finish. With a few breaks around the net, Vic might well have narrowed the margin. However, the Irish were not to be denied in this, their best game to date. They came out skating at the bell and never let up till the end.

Legge started the Double-blue on their way, driving one off goaltender Pearson's arm, in the fourth minute of the game. Money was serving a tripping sentence for Vic at the time.

Gionna made it 2-0, at 18:10 of the first frame, with a screened shot to the lower-left corner, from ten feet out. Stock and Drolet of the Irish each missed good scoring opportunities in this period.

Vic were two men short for a minute and thirty seconds near the beginning of the second stanza, as Holden and Jardine picked up two quick penalties. St. Mike's maintained terrific pressure, but were only able to add one marker with the advantage. Halligan potting just before Vic returned to full strength.

DeCarlo blasted one to the top-left corner, from the blue line, to make it 4-0, at 6:15. Stock, who tipped in Kostyk's goalmouth pass, and Horvath, deflecting Reddall's blue line drive, completed the route.

Eleven penalties were called in all, with Vic taking six. The teams split four major sentences for fighting, as the heavy hitting frayed tempers in the last period. Vic goalie, Pearson took offence at Gionna's behavior in front of the net and waded in, swinging. While they were being separated, Sheppard of St. Mike's and Koshan of Vic started a private party in the corner. Gionna received an additional minor for his elbow, which started it all.

The line of O'Neil, Drolet and Legge, with Stock and Horvath led the Irish attack, though all three lines were strong. Kostyk, DeCarlo and Reddall did most of their thumping.

Hamilton, Truscot and Plaxton led the Vic offense, while Money supplied their blue line bounce.

NOTES: Andrews in the Irish nets had a comparatively easy time in registering his zero. He did handle a few tough shots, notably a screened drive by Hamilton, in the first period. . . . Stephen and Yakimoff didn't have all their trouble from the players. Just after the brawl on the ice, the two officials invaded the stands to quiet an enraged and profane spectator. The anonymous hot-head apologized for his behavior, after the game. . . . The delay caused by the brawl in the last period shortened the match by two and a half minutes, the arena bell ringing before playing time had run out.

Sports Profile

Barbara Gratton

By JOANNE HOUSLEY

One of the best known sport personalities on the campus, belongs to a five foot two, blue eyed brunette. She is Barbara Gratton, a first year student at St. Michael's College, who also holds the title of Canadian Senior Women's Figure Skating Champion.

Barbara began her skating career at the age of six in company with her sister Elizabeth at the Toronto Granite Club, where in less than a year they came First and Second in the Club Championships. In 1949 skating for the Toronto Skating Club, Elizabeth was first and Barbara was second in the Canadian Junior Championship. In 1950 the order was reversed.

In 1954 when Elizabeth retired, Barbara went on to win the Senior Title, and to represent Canada in the World's Championships held in Oslo, Norway, in which she was fourth. No sooner home from Europe, than she was off to Lake Placid to reign as Queen of the Winter Carnival there, along with Hayes Jenkin, the Men's World Champion, as King. In the midst of all this excitement, Barbara was preparing to write nine Upper School examinations. She was very successful, passing all nine - with five first class honours.

In the fall of this year, Barbara began training preparing to defend her title at the Canadians being held in Toronto this month. However, just after Christmas, she decided to retire from active competition, and to skate only for pleasure, which had been her original intention.

Perhaps her last official exhibition will be given next month at the McGill Winter Carnival, but whatever her future plans, we wish her luck, as well as every success in her college career.

Women's Basketball Team Prepares for Tournament

By NORMA WALSH

Intercollegiate basketball-time has rolled around again and once more the University of Toronto will be represented by senior and intermediate teams. Coach Mickey Barnett of the intercollegiate squad made her final cuts last night; seven veterans of last year are included on the roster. Jane Duff, Sally Wallace, Mary Winship, and Pat Swaze are the sharp-shooting returnees to the forward line. With newcomers Sue McLoughlin and Claire McMullen, the senior girls are assured of powerful offensive play.

The guard line has veterans Pam Miles, Lou Martin, and June Hansford. The new faces of defense will be those of Audrey Lamb, Pat Davis, and Gwen Anne Miller, who, along with Claire McMullen, is a graduate of the intermediate ranks. June Hansford also doubles on the forward line, having set a new anti-air scoring record this year with 31 points in a single game.

The intercollegiate week-end this year will be held at Western, commencing on the 25th of February. The Toronto squad will get their first test next week when they face a team of intercollegiate grads. The final date for this contest is not yet definite.

The intermediate team is being coached this year by a former intercollegiate star, Jane Timmins. They are members of an organized league which includes Toronto, Ryerson, and MacMaster. Their first contest will be next Thursday evening at O.C.E. when they will face a powerful squad from Ryerson.

Both intercollegiate and intermediate teams are expected to be strong contenders in their respective leagues. Let's hope the Varsity squad will be successful in their efforts to once more retain possession of the Bronze Baby.

Beagles Win 53-40

By CHUCK DOLMAN

Yesterday afternoon, Law A's defeated SPS III 53-40, for their third straight win placing them at the top of Group III. Law exhibited the usual fine team-work and ability that has made this small band of competitors a strong threat, no matter what campus sport they engage in.

Led by ace centre, Jack Iwaniki, who garnered 20 points, the Beagles outguffed their huskier opponents in a wild and scramble type of game, marred by an abundance of fouls and violations.

Iwaniki's points were made by a smooth right-handed hook shot and a jump one-hander with either hand. Ted Luck hit with long-set shots for his total of 10 points, duplicated by hard-driving Lionel Schipper. A strong two-way game was played for Law by Neil "Funchy" Proverbs, who notched 7 points. Excellent defensive displays were performed by Law's little men, Al Eagleson and Herb Solway whenever they were on the floor. "Eagie's" favorite play was to speed up from behind an SPS player and steal the ball away. However, he often stole more than the ball, resulting in his disputing two or three fouls called in his honor.

For SPS, whose shooting and passing were away off, 6' 4" centre Dick Bright and strong man John Iglar were top scorers, getting 15 and 11 points respectively. Ted Grunau and Ross Fleming also had their moments.

Law's lack of bench strength and the fact that they have only one real high-scorer in Iwaniki keep them from being rated on a par with such strong aggregations as SPS Jr's and St. Mike's A's, but they can be expected to give it their best, and who knows?

In other Major League games, Pre-Dents handed UC V's their first defeat, 43-26.

In night action, J. Guida sank a one-handed jump shot from outside the key just as the buzzer sounded to end the game to give Dentistry II yr. a 29-28 win over the Trinity C team. Guida ended up with 12 points, while Murray Pace sparked Trinity with 17.

Ray Atkins calmly sank two foul shots after regulation time had expired to give Sr. Vic an uphill 36-35 win over previously unbeaten St. Mike's B's. Lars Thompson of Vic was the game's high-scorer with 14 points.

In the final major league game of the day Vic IV's defeated I yr. Dents 50-30.

Malcuzyński & TSO

Wednesday night's T.S.O. subscription concert was a most interesting and intriguing event, dominated by the piano artistry of the Polish-American Witold Malcuzyński. Apart from the soloist's singular achievement the orchestral numbers while partly enjoyable, provoked some thought for comparison.

If we found Mozart's Symphony No. 29 rather anticlimactic it was because of our great delight in Dr. Eoyd Neel's recent presentation of another work by the same master with the Hart House Orchestra. Thus our critical awareness has risen perhaps a bit too high above the level of Sir Ernest's conception prevented him from giving the the orchestras' different interpretations has reconfirmed the principles of sound Mozartian performance. Professional restraint evident in Sir Ernest's conception prevented him to give the nicest phrasing throughout this charming symphony. Lightness and vivacity was the framework of Dr. Neel's Mozart with musical sentences flowing effortlessly into each other. Sir Ernest's instruments did not exploit the textural possibilities of this finely woven work. The contrapuntal first movement appeared no more than a homogenous mass of colour i.e. an inorganic superimposition of the strings above the wind instruments. On the other hand the dozen or so players under Dr. Neel's direction became ideally interdependent entities through which the attentive listener could easily follow the intertwining texture of one of the Divertimentos.

If Sir Ernest was not at ease with the delicate tonal structure of Mozart, he had a thorough command over works demanding a certain degree of showmanship. Arnold Bax's sardonic "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy" was well characterized by Sir Ernest's rhythmic dexterity. In Ravels Rapsodie Espagnole we enjoyed the efficient use of orchestral dynamics expressing the exciting qualities of this colourful impression of Spain.

Witold Malcuzyński's performance of the Chopin Concerto No. 2 in F minor was a revelation after a host of stereotyped "schmalz" interpreters of this "popular" master. While even most of the "great names" conceive Chopin as a useful vehicle for their own virtuosity, Malcuzyński is first and foremost a philosopher and not an acrobat in this medium! His playing is so penetrating that even the intervals are replete with suggestions. For Malcuzyński every tone is a separate entity while a great many players conceive Chopin in terms of sickening romanticism and a cruel almost impersonal technical efficiency. Naturally this contradictory relationship cannot produce but disastrous musical effects. Malcuzyński's Chopin on the other hand is most evenly constructed and beauty flows organically within its structure.

The same artist gave also an exceptionally beautiful performance of the Liszt Concerto No. 2 later in the programme.

Erwin J. Biener

the hansen trio

Two violinists and a pianist form the Hansen Trio which played at Wednesday's five o'clock Recital. Florence and Andreea Hansen with pianist Carol Wright, in their playing of Purcell's Golden Sonata, revealed the ensemble playing which must have come from long hours of practice together.

The five movements of the Sonata improved progressively and the final Allegro was very ably handled. The performance was well-drilled but would have been more interesting, perhaps, had the violins blended tonally. The piano playing of Miss Wright was irreproachable.

La Folia by Corelli-Leonard, known as the final essence of classical Italian violin music, was played by the older of the two Hansen sisters. The noble theme was musically stated but the violinist allowed her intonation to slip when she met with difficulty in the double-stopping.

In the Etude No. 28 of Florentino-Spohr, Florence was joined by her sister Andreea and the two artists here achieved perfect teamwork. The firm tone and sure fingering of Andreea Hansen was marred only by an uneven tempo in her playing of the Concerto No. 22 in A minor by Viotti. The Six Duos of Bela Bartok were in welcome contrast to the three previous works of Italian classicists. What the violinists may have lost in brittle precision, they regained by a more lyric and smooth tone quality in the first of these Duos. The Trio turned finally to a Sonata by another 17th and 18th century Italian composer. In their playing of the Tartini work, one could see flawless bowing so essential to good violin playing.

Perhaps, due to unfamiliarity with music for two violins or due to a certain musical prejudice, I would prefer to have Florence and Andreea Hansen perform as soloists. When playing together, their tone seems to lose firmness and colour, and thus becomes uninteresting. The clean technique and unflinching rhythmic sense of Carol Wright are particularly commendable.

Forestry Tops at Carnival

Capers at Caledon Hills

Forestry walked off with top honours in the University Winter Carnival this weekend. They gained a total of 1,172 points in the competitive events held at Caledon Hills Farm and were awarded the much coveted Fox-pelt trophy which was accepted by Brian Cross of Forestry.

About 200 participants and spectators attended the carnival in spite of snow which slowed traffic. The snow was excellent for Saturday morning's cross-country and slalom skiing and the farm's pond provided a perfect setting for skating.

Forestry beat S.P.S. in the wood-sawing competition while Mining and Geology won the Orienteering competition, which consisted of reaching the farm from an unknown spot. The St. Hilda's "Amazons" were matched against the Engineers in hockey, although, neither team was given points for the exhibition game.

The highest number of points in winter camping, or building a shelter with the fewest possible materials, was given to Mining and Geology, which constructed an igloo.

Caller for the square dance Saturday night was Adrian Adamson, Trinity. The dance was held in the barn at the farm and spectators found seats in the hayloft. In addition to the dance there was a skating party after which the skaters roasted marshmallows over a bonfire. Less hardy individuals preferred the singsong in the farmhouse to the outdoor events.

Sunday morning breakfast for those who stayed overnight was cooked by the contestants for Carnival Queen. The girls, who were well-experienced in pancake-cooking after last Tuesday night's competition served superb pancakes and bacon.

After breakfast, a horse-drawn sleigh-ride was followed by more skiing and a wood-chopping competition in which Forestry defeated S.P.S. and U.C.

Hoop Blues Victorious Defeat Lawrence Tech. Stulac Drops Cool 21

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity's Basketball Blues, in their 72-66 victory over visiting Lawrence Tech this past Saturday, continued a tradition established last fall by the Football Blues of recent Yates Cup renown. Be it now known that, in sport, Toronto is a "Second-Half" University.

In Football it was the practice to hand out a touchdown or two to the opposition, then work from behind to end up comfortably ahead. In Basketball the same is done by playing as poorly as possible in the first half, spotting the competition a reassuring lead, then driving in the last half to cut down the lead and win despite it. This the Blues did against Lawrence and, in the doing, looked like a great club.

Down by 14 points at the half and thoroughly outclassed by the Tech club, the Blues outscored them by 20 in the final period, outplaying the visitors by an even greater margin. Loose defensive play in that bad first half, with a ragged offensive system made the Blues much the inferior team, putting them at the mercy of the well-organized Blue Devils.

The Varsity zone, supposedly impenetrable on the Hart House court, gave the guests only slight trouble at the start. Instead of wasting effort on working the ball around the zone and in, the Americans simply threw from outside. With the 6'6" of large Sid Dawson under the hoop there was no trouble for the visitors about rebounds, as the Lawrence star simply picked the ball off the backboards, either tipping it back in to the net or passing out to his mates for another try.

A remarkable feature of the game, through both surprising halves, was the refereeing and the effect it had on the players. Though some 43 points were scored from the foul-line, there was a pleasing lack of interference from the referees' whistle on minor infractions and technicalities. So satisfied were the Lawrence people with the work of Barry Lowes and Jack Gurney that Walt Dzurus exclaimed "This is better refereeing than we get at home!" Lawrence coach Ray Mawhorter, a very calm fellow during the game, agreed. All this leads to the conclusion that Varsity is the only club in Intercollegiate ball free from "home" refereeing.

The distribution of scoring power among the Blues, most of the top men doing their best in the last period, shows clearly the excellent teamwork of the Blues. With the Blue Devils tiring quickly in the second half, the Blues fell into a pattern of neat and sharp passing which, added

Faculty Council Permits Revived Engineering Society Constitution

The Engineering Society has had its constitution restored. The Faculty Committee to direct the affairs of the Engineering Society during the Suspension of its constitution recommended "that the suspension of the Constitution of the Engineering Society be now raised." This recommendation has been adopted by the Faculty Council.

The Executive of the Engineering Society was informed of this decision on January 11, the date of the last Executive meeting. At this meeting the President of the Society, Jack Rossal, made the contents of a report which had been composed and submitted to the Caput of the University last September by the Engineering Society.

The report stated that the Faculty Council had given the Engineering Society the responsibility of investigating the "shameful consequences" of the Freshman Tour of the Campus last September.

The President and first Vice-President of the Society made up the Investigating Committee.

The report concluded that the incident was largely a case of mob hysteria and that there did not seem to be any particular persons guilty of trying to incite the freshmen. "We can only conclude," said the report, "that Professor McAndrew was not deliberately struck by any one student as was intimated in the newspapers."

The report recommended that the Society never again organize or condone a tour of any building outside the Engineering Faculty. Engineer's Hats should never again appear on the campus.

The report also stated that the responsibility of the incident can probably be put as much on the upper classmen as on the freshmen. The report said that when the President and Vice-President of the Society were interviewing all the first-year students, they found the students co-operative, sane, and sound, and ashamed of their actions.

MP's Hear Student Reps

The need for scholarships and bursaries for University students was expressed by representatives of NCFUS and the SAC at a meeting with seven of Ontario's Members of Parliament last Friday.

Bill Angus, Peter Martin, Gord Hurlburt, Mary Ellen Gibson, Ian Scott, Norm Chalmers, and John Barnes were the students' representatives. They presented a seven-point programme to the MP's who were described as "extremely interested".

The brief was based on the need for University graduates in all fields, presenting the difficulties which kept some potential students from ever reaching University, and hence emphasizing the need for scholarships.

The delegates felt that the provinces' rights should be respected in this matter, and showed that 4,000 students could be helped at a cost of two million dollars, an increase of 1½ million over the present total available.

NCFUS hopes to approach Premier Leslie Frost and Minister of Education Dunlop in the near future.

Election Time H. H. Announces

Assistant to the Warden of Hart House, Garth McDowell last night expressed hope that potential Committee candidates would begin to think in terms of running for election.

Who says nobody takes exercise, he asked. Last year nearly 2,500 members exercised their franchise, he said.

Bracing himself for the storm of ballots, controversy and campaigning, McDowell said: "Hart House through its administrative staff is run for and by the students. Their active consideration expressed through their nominations and voting makes it a more vital and dynamic place."

He said he was counting the days until March 2nd, election day.

Carnival Assignment

By JO PATRICK

As I crouch to write this (the sharp angle of the ceiling over my upper bunk bed prevents me from sitting upright) several thoughts race through my mind — most of them bitter. I have accepted my "Varsity" assignments but this one is too much!

I didn't really mind getting up at the crack of dawn to take the earliest bus to Caledon Hills for the weekend, and I didn't even object to pushing the bus when it got stuck in the snow. I reassured myself by the thought that I could write my story by watching the contestants through a window while seated inside by a roaring fire.

However, it seemed that they were short of participants for their "orienteering" — and before I knew it, I was stranded miles from everywhere with a compass and a pair of snowshoes. Determinedly

I set out in my best dress and my spike heels and after hours of crawling over rocks and through bushes, I finally reached the farm again.

Just as I was sneaking off to lie down in a quiet corner, some enthusiastic individual bounded in and dragged me off for a "little square dance". The large, airy (i.e. drafty) barn was truly picturesque, although most of my partners seemed to take the call "swing your partner" a little too literally. Picking a few odd wisps of straw from my hair I stumbled back of the girls' dorm, cheered by the thought of a warm, comfortable bed.

Accommodations at Caledon were really superb. Not having had foresight enough to bring a sleeping bag, I had to be content with rolling up in a mouldy old blanket in an upper bunk. I was lucky enough to share my wide, comfortable bunk with a charming girl who had brought along crackers for a bedtime snack. Luckier still, I was located next to the pot-bellied stove, and if I hadn't been afraid that my mattress would go up in flames, I would have floated over the individuals on the other side of the room who were turning blue with the cold. For some reason, probably that I'm unused to such luxury, I haven't been able to sleep, but the candle by which I've been writing is going out so now I'm going to take a nice long walk before breakfast.

NOTE

The only clue as to the whereabouts of this reporter is this story, found caught in a thicket near several large snow drifts.

Judy Francis Carnival Queen

Perhaps the most exciting event of the Winter Carnival at Caledon Hills this weekend was the announcing of the Carnival Queen. She is Judy Francis, II Vic, who represented POT in the contest. Bosko Loncarevic presented Miss Francis with a round silver tray, which will later be engraved.

The decision of the judges was based on the spirit the contestants had shown in participating in different events, though not necessarily winning these events. The judges also named two ladies-in-waiting, or runners-up: Mary Jane Champs, and Joan Pierdon.

The other contestants were: Diane Webster—Mining and Geology, Pat O'Brien—St. Mike's, Elaine Bassin—U.C., Katherine Boyd—Dental Nursing, Mary Paterson—Architecture, Sandra McFarland—Vic, Katherine Gray Trinity, Claire McMullen—KKT, Barbara Brown—Nursing and Joan Gainer—Vic.

Mr. Loncarevic said: "The judges' decision was particularly difficult, because all the contestants showed versatility in cooking pancakes over an open fire in front of a square igloo and sawing wood in the Drill Hall. They also worked in the farm cafeteria, and they are to be congratulated for their spirit and co-operation."

2-ton Icy Stein Holds 200 Gals.

The contribution of Zeta Psi Fraternity to the Winter Carnival is an ice sculpture in the shape of a beer mug.

The mug, said to be ten feet high, was constructed by the 43 fraternity brothers from two tons of ice. It was erected on the frat house lawn at 118 St. George St. last Wednesday.

A spokesman for the fraternity claimed that the hollow stein has been tested and found to hold 200 gallons of beer. The frat members were unable to fill the length of time required to empty the mug.

The Zeta Psi representative said the beer was obtained from the fraternity's well-stocked cellar.

A supposedly-informed source described this last statement as "merely an attempt to attract new members. The cellars of good old — are far better stocked anyway."

Thorny Paths

The case against membership in NFCUS under present conditions continues to be one of dollars and cents.

An interesting comparison of the proposed budgets for the year 1954-55 for NFCUS and the SAC can be made.

The NFCUS budget calls for a total income of $14,470.00. The budget of the SAC for the same term, with 7900 fee-paying students at $5.00 each, would be $39,500.00.

During the same year NFCUS is budgeting for an expenditure of $670 on projects while the SAC is budgeting $6455.00 for services and activities and $9,854.00 for publications.

What this means is that NFCUS is planning on spending less than 4% of its budget on projects while the SAC is about to spend nearly 40% of its budgets on services and publications.

The supporters of NFCUS will point to the priority list of projects to be implemented when the universities of Manitoba and Toronto have once again entered the fold by jumping over the new 50c state.

However, that priority list totals $2,700 dollars which would, under optimum conditions, bring the expenditure on projects to $3,390 or still less than 20% of its budget.

Under the very best conditions possible, the most the SAC can hope to increase its revenue is with $3500 from increased enrollment, $1500 from book exchange money diverted to current accounts.

Balance against that is the $2800 required to retain NFCUS membership at the 50c rate, $1800 required to pay increases in printing costs for Torontonensis and The Varsity.

This means that the best possible picture would give us an increased revenue of $5000 and increased expenses of $5600. A deficit of at least $600. And this picture represents the best possible picture.

There is only one way in which the SAC can continue to give effective service to the students and still retain membership in the national organization. That method is the one decided upon last year when a similar situation was with us.

We must have a fee raise. There can be no other satisfactory way to resolve the difficulty.

To operate an organization of the scope of the SAC with so slim an operating surplus is sheer suicide. This year's budget calls for a surplus of $577. This situation cannot continue for long.

Worthwhile SAC activities are being seriously hampered by the budgetary restrictions. The University Orchestra and Chorus, the All Varsity Revue and the Varsity have all been cut to the barest possible minimum and one, the All Varsity Revue has been completely done away with.

Students of this university have already expressed their belief on this subject and while the Board of Governors saw fit to reject their request, we cannot believe that such a refusal can be justified and we believe that the only course open to the SAC is along that path so clearly defined by necessity.

Caps, Jackets, Even "Skule" to Go

By STAFF MEMBER

Toike Oike is the newspaper — official or not — of the University of Toronto's Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

In the issue of January 21st, an article appears on the front page condemning the use of the terms "Skule" and "Skulehouse" because "after we graduate we want to be known as a professional engineer, not a graduate Skuleman."

Apart from the obvious grammatical error — obvious to all but Toike Oike staff, it seems — this is all very well. But on the upper left corner of this paper appears the lead sentence: "Let's see if we red-blooded engineers can wrest the Skule canon from those green Foresters!"

This is far, one would say, from the policy printed in bold-face type: "Let's just forget about Skule."

Is this happy, boyish term to be kept on as an elusion? — are we to say 'skuleannon' in future to prevent the insidious use of the word? Or is Toike Oike simply being a little hypocritical in its new creed?

But the headline does not seem to support this. It is conservative: ONLY 600 ENGINEERS GO TO HELL! We submit that if Toike Oike is sincere in their campaign, then what they should attack is not a word, but a thought pattern — the type of thinking that associates cultural activities with "stupid Arts types", or permits a group of "Skulemen" to run through a University building and wound a professor.

In this regard, Toike Oike announces that "The Engineering Society once more has a constitution." The article continues to point out that the incident was a result of mass hysteria, that Professor McAndrew was inadvertently wounded, that apologies were made to all.

Toike-Oike also seems to dwell at great length on the dress of engineers. From now on, the sale of the colorful Blue and Yellow Engineering jackets is discontinued. The striped railroad caps of the freshman are also not to be worn, as they are an object of disgrace. They will be replaced by green ties.

Oh Well, a rose by any other color . . .

But for one, we are very sorry to see the colorful Skuleman disappear to make way for an educated, mature well-dressed Professional Engineer.

To a Charge, a Reply

The following paragraph appeared on page one of the latest issue of Toike Oike, the official publication of the Engineering Society, as a quotation from the official report of the Engineering Society made to the Caput of the University. This report was made at the request of the Caput in connection with the riot of freshman engineers which occurred on September 23 which resulted in the injury of a UC Professor.

"Both pictures and interviews given to the Varsity reached the downtown papers via Varsity staff members. The Executive of the Society (the Engineering Society) feel that this action on the part of the Varsity was a breach of confidence to the executive and certainly a very disloyal act to the University."

The Varsity challenges the accuracy of this statement.

At no time did any member of the Executive of the Engineering Society, or any engineer, give any information or statement to The Varsity in confidence. At no time did any person who made any statement to The Varsity on this incident suggest that he desired, or was under the impression that, the information given was to be held in confidence. It must be presumed that, when a person is talking to a newspaper reporter, anything he does not specifically state is not for publication may be quoted.

The pictures which The Varsity printed on the incident were taken by a student of the university — an engineer — who was not a staff member of The Varsity. This free-lance photographer gave the pictures that he had taken of the rioting to The Varsity on the early evening of the 23rd of September, the day of the disturbances. Later that evening of the 23rd of September, the day of the disturbances. Later that evening, he was contacted by a representative of one of the evening downtown dailies, and the photographer then sold the negatives of the 3 pictures which had been earlier given to The Varsity to the downtown daily. These pictures, sold without the knowledge of any member of the Varsity staff, later appeared in this evening paper.

The other downtown daily obtained its pictures of the incident by mysterious methods from the Hart House Camera Club Room. This paper also published a photograph of the front page of the Varsity, showing one of the photos in question. They did this without the prior knowledge or consent of any member of The Varsity staff.

Both papers could reprint pictures, stories, and even in one instance a photostat of our front page, because The Varsity is not copyrighted.

At no time did any member of the Varsity staff write any story, or take any photograph, for the use of the downtown dailies, or give them any material whatsoever.

The Varsity does not consider that the publishing of a report of an incident of such considerable importance and interest to the students of the University was in any sense "disloyal to the University".

We consider that to do otherwise than publish as full, accurate, and factual account of the incident as was possible would be disloyal to the University and its students.

HOUSE OF BERNARDA ALBA

Last night I went to the opening of the third of this season's Hart House productions by Robert Gill, a play by the modern Spanish writer, Garcia Lorca, called The House of Bernarda Alba. Readers of the contemporary theatre critics will probably have been waiting for this play to arrive all season, but to most of the audience it comes as a bolt out of the blue.

I cannot honestly say that I think you will find it the most enjoyable evening of theatre this season and indeed I cannot even be sure that you will enjoy it at all. But I have a feeling that this strong, disturbing play is an experience not to be missed — is a taste, (like Eliot's poetry) which may well grow stronger with time.

The play opens in complete darkness and as the lights come up we find ourselves in a large, slightly sombre room dominated by an almost glowing crucifix. From this, attention turns to the stark air of discipline created by the sentinel row of hard, simple, straight-backed chairs. The two servants are talking when the women return in their stately funeral black, and the action is afoot. The man of the family has just been buried and his proud wife sternly decrees a mourning of eight years for the five daughters and the mad old grandmother who completes this haughty household. We should like to label this rigid pride a mere hypocrisy and so let the matter lie. But the clear strength of the acting of Juliana Gianelli makes it quite clear that Bernarda Alba, however hateful and however much a type, is at least far too rich a personality to be taken for a cliché.

The business of the play centres for the next three acts around the mounting tensions in this sexually-frustrated houshold of women whose mourning throws them together with the insistent lack of privacy and electric intimacy one associates with a submarine.

I hope I have by now whetted your curiosity about this strange play, which couples the moodi-ness of Maeterlink with the tenseness of Sartre; for the awful fact is that the entire cast is female. Far from skittishness, this fact merely adds to the air of frustration. Eventually a suitor arrives for the hand of the ugly eldest daughter (played with simple conviction in a well-rounded performance by Catherine Patterson) more in love with the fortune which she alone is to inherit than with her forbidding personality. Patricia Moffat portrays with a good deal of charm the youngest daughter just out of her teens whose dread of the privations upon which family pride is to launch her, leads her to revolt and try to steal the man by offering him the genuine passion and love of her body and fresh soul. Cast in contrast to the two is the next sister which Lyla Guizin renders with a well-controlled strength suggesting that she has brought more to this part than meets the casual glance — a deep enough understanding to run through, say, another pair of acts if the author had called for them.

The ending of the play is so much more frustrating than tragic that it left me quite unsatisfied. But the terse unity of the production, its poetic rhythms (which had the merit of being subtle enough to avoid obtruding) may well tempt you, if you see it, to go back to see it again. It is one of those plays whose form and content are utterly blended but whose tragic or dramatic fact it is hard to grasp. Fortunately in this all-female cast there are no weak links and the performances of Frances Halpenny and Juliana Gianelli were definitely first-rate as, indeed was the much shorter part of the mad grandmother played by Rita Ubrico.

Romeo and Juliet

It is entirely probable that fifty years hence, film enthusiasts will still be arguing about the relative merits of Renato Castellani's much-heralded Romeo and Juliet. Amid violent protests from the audience (who would have preferred the award to go to On the Waterfront) it won the grand award at the Venice Film Festival last year. Ever since then, critics have been quarrelling about its ungentelemanly treatment of Shakespeare, about the performances of its actors, and any other relevant topic you would care to mention.

Romeo and Juliet is not exactly my favourite of the Bard's, but I am quite willing to sit through a performance which makes of it what Shakespeare intended: a vivid, passionate, swiftly moving tale of foolish love and the vagaries of fate. Castellani's version is none of these; with the idea of the malevolence of fate alone does he make any headway, and then only by means of an extra scene of his own, describing Friar John's delay on the way to Mantua. Too great an attention to creating impressive visuals slow the pace of this swiftest of all romances, and coupled with the notable lack of spirit exhibited by the star-crossed actors, it consistently brings the spectator to boredom.

As for cutting Shakespeare, in principle I personally couldn't care less. Orson Welles' film of MacBeth was Shakespeare so mauled as to appear almost unrecognizable, but it was a brilliant film as film, and a superb recreation in filmic terms of the spirit of the play. Castellani's recreation is not, and so I don't think his cutting of the original is justified, since it is possible that the spirit whose lack I bewail may have slipped out through one of the holes in the script.

In one respect, however, this is far and away the best film I have ever seen. In the superb beauty of its colour, of its settings and costumes, and of its camera set-ups, it is unlikely that it will be surpassed in our time. Someone has remarked that it is as if Carpaccio were the cameraman, but Robert Krasker, whose first technicolour film was Henry V is the fortunate genius whose responsibility this wealth of beauty is. The visuals are designed to duplicate, as often as possible, the paintings of the Florentines, but this idea is constantly reinforced by a sense of composition and space which was characteristic of the later period of the Italian realist film. The two traditions are admirably paired.

Romeo and Juliet has several rather brilliant moments, despite what I have said in general of the film, and ultimately they are the responsibility of the camera work: for example, the two contrasted scenes of Juliet's trip to the church, on her sunny wedding-day and on the overcast day when, black-hooded, ironically having to push her way through crowds of children, she goes to ask Friar Laurence how she can avoid marrying Paris. The performances of the players are of minor interest, since, while not exactly appalling, they are unbearably dull. Only Flora Robson, as the Nurse, takes any advantage of the play's vivid characterization.

Twelfth Night

The Crest Theatre's anniversary production is less gratifying in itself than as representing something, the something being, of course, a solid year of achievement.

Taken piecemeal it was all very well but the pieces didn't fit just as well as they might have done. The tongue-in-cheek jollity, the chuckles and belly laughs, the breathless burlesque which are the liver and lights of Twelfth Night sank without a bubble, dragged down by slow pacing and general lack of imagination.

We were beguiled from time to time into agreeing with the production, by John Wilson's thoroughly delightful set and by the drunken hilarity sporadically expressed by Max Helpmann's rowdy Sir Toby and his equally entertaining companions. Murray Davis as Sir Andrew Aguecheek, for one, was so like a lost wet kitten in his blue-eyed strangeness that it would have seemed unkind to laugh at him if it had not been impossible to resist. Eric House's Feste, too, was not only very funny and beautifully finished (as Mr. House's performances always are), but a trenchant commentary on the action, a hint that Twelfth Night is a cheerful burlesque of the circumstances it relates. Murray Davis' Malvolio, again, was a master-piece of deportment, at the very least. And yet . . . and yet . . . so often the production lapsed into heaviness and became more splendid than sparkling. The production can not claim full credit even for splendour: its costumes, for some hitherto unfathomed reason, were so very dull.

It was the general air of elegance and panners which succeeded in spoiling the production. The comic characters (except for two: Betty Leighton's irrepressible and certainly very naughty Maria, and Harold Burke's lively and completely consistent Fabian) seemed a little abashed by the decorum of their superiors and restrained themselves accordingly. Frances Hyland, after all, was such a sweet and pretty Olivia that not even Sir Toby could remain defiant under her aegis. George McCowan as Orsino, the passionately fickle duke, with Barbara Chilcott and Grant Reddick as the adventurous twins, Sebastian and Viola, created such an atmosphere of knight-hood being in flower that Shakespeare's lines on the more human side of love seemed almost out of place.

This behaviour on the part of the lovers would have been the perfect foil to the less daintily regulated affairs of their friends and neighbours, if only the latter had been content to keep their proper place instead of aping their betters and introducing the court into the kitchen. Worst of all, their imitation was not a clumsy copy of aristocratic airs and graces but a reflection of well-bred lack of enthusiasm. It is impossible to be at once bawdy and courtly, gentle and hilarious, rapid and gracious.

Artists looking for a style try their hand at everything. J. M. Reynolds, in Hart House gallery, shows paintings of children in bold brush-work and flat colours, the same technique applied to landscape, Picasso-esque women with furnishings, and a dozen poster-like sketches in oil on paper.

The children all seem the worse for the experience. The colour is pasty; the faces and figures have a wooden feeling. He uses a bold brush stroke that seems too clumsy for the treatment of children. There is no feeling of delicacy.

This treatment is even less successfully used in the few landscapes displayed. The broad brush stroke is successful only if set in a irrelevant to the painter's purpose.

Here, however, you feel that the painter was in too much of a hurry to do the job right. The problem of making a landscape alive in colour is not solved by recourse to drab green; primeval slime would be more interesting.

Woman at Table is one of the Picasso-like paintings. The simplification and distortion of form do not create a new viewpoint; no searching for aesthetic insight seems to have troubled the artist, and certainly none moves the viewer.

More interesting are a dozen sketches in oil on paper glued to masonite. The absorbent paper causes the paint to dry with a dull, chalky finish, and wash becomes almost opaque when it soaks in. The pictures are brightly coloured, cheerful efforts without much depth or range of expression. These paintings have the feeling of posters; the colours are generally obvious, the form blash. — the sort of thing that catches the eye and diverts the mind but momentarily.

Rider by Moonlight is more fun. Interesting playing with loosely brushed colour in the background helps the atmosphere but the composition is static and no real moonlight fills the scene. More of this sort of painting would interest me; it seems capable of further development.

Line cuts by Ted Kramole are in the Print Room.

ICE BLUES REGISTER WIN AND TIE

By JOHN WILSON

Looming off in the not-so-distant future is one of the most interesting finishes in the Intercollegiate Hockey League. The Blues, simply by gaining that 1-1 draw with the Carabins Saturday night, now lead the standings with eleven points, seven ahead of the second-place McGill Redmen who have gained four in three games.

While the Blues unceremoniously dumped the Tribe 9-1 in Montreal before Christmas, the men of Rocky Robillard appear to have undergone a change of form, and have whipped both the University of Montreal and Laval soundly in their last two games. Assuming that they will continue in this vein, come another few weeks and the Tribe will be hot on the tail of the Blues with an even number of points. Since three of the Blues' last four games are with McGill, they will have to be sure of tripping the Redmen in order to win the Queens Cup. In view of McGill's recent showing, this will be no easy task.

What we're getting at is that to win the silverware in this league all you have to do is end up in first place, and you escape the danger of a playoff. Of course if two teams are tied for the top spot, then there would be a post-season contest, but the Blues have an odd number of points, and McGill an even number so there isn't going to be any tie for the championship. Thus, if the Blues were to drop just two of those remaining games with the Tribe, the McGills could slip by into the winner's position.

This happened last season, when the Carabins started off in high gear and roared into first place well in front of the other three clubs. Then Laval tied Varsity and before long the chips were down for the Carabins. In order to win the title they had to defeat Varsity in their last game while McGill tripped Laval. But the Blues played the spoiler's part and edged them 8-7, and Laval won the Queens Cup by the slimmest of margins.

Since it doesn't pay to be pessimistic we're just sounding a note of warning, or if you like, looking forward to a colorful finish to the hockey season instead of the cleanup we had expected. Let's hope it's unlikely that the Blues will fold before any onslaught, much less McGill.

This Is The Year . . .

. . . for the University of Toronto to walk off with all the major laurels in the world of Intercollegiate sport. The football Blues have already done their share, and the hockey Blues seem to be well on the way. Only fly in the ointment thus far is the basketball team, who looked pretty impressive in that 72-66 win over highly-rated Lawrence Tech. Considering that the early favorites, the Assumption Purple Raiders, dropped two decisions this week-end to McGill and Queens, the only opposition for the Blues will be Western, who were rather shaky while posting an 80-65 win over MacMaster Saturday night. Looks pretty promising.

From the Blue Room . . . Western's Coulter Osborne is the league's leading scorer on the basketball court with an average of 21 in two games. . .

. . . It's interesting to note that the hockey Blue's starting line-up of Dave Reid, Clare Fisher, Dave Stephen, and Dave Jackson are running in the top five spots in the league scoring race after six games.

Baby Blues Rap Lawmen 76-58 Preparing for Game Wednesday

By MAY ROSENTHAL

What was expected to be the Baby Blue basketball team's most challenging contest turned out to be just another game Saturday evening as Osgoode Hall of the Metropolitan League was dumped 76-58. For the Intermediates this game was a tune-up for their league game with McMaster this Wednesday.

Osgoode Hall, well-known in recent years for its good basketball teams, for most of this game, was behind a considerable amount, and could not seem to unleash any kind of effective scoring attack.

Of late the Baby Blues have found the going comparatively easy with the result that Johnny McManus has been able to give inexperienced second stringers a chance. Two newcomers, Ed Rigby and Barry Stroud, were the Baby Blues' most efficient scorers with ten and eleven respectively. Both seemed to have the confidence lacked by some of the other rookies of the team. Rigby was rebounding fairly well under the basket and hit well on two occasions with his jumping one-hand set-shot. Stroud, on the other hand, was hitting well from 25 feet out.

With the exception of two men, Fran Sutton and Dave Bernstein, Osgoode lacked scoring punch and the height to snag rebounds. Bernstein was the big scorer of the night with 22 points, scoring twelve on foul shots. Although he was Osgoode's principle rebounder, he was unable to cope with the jumping of Rigby and John Dacyshyn, the Baby Blues' other high scorer with eleven.

After gaining a large lead the Intermediates started to play an unexciting ball game. Their guards, with the exception of Stroud, were not hitting well from outside, and the screens attempted were not very successful. Most of the scoring was made from within the foul shot line. Harold Rotman with ten and Ruby Richman with eight were sinking their close-in shots.

Probably the factor contributing to Osgoode's failure was the absence of their tall men, Gary Vipond and Wendell Wigle. The latter was one of Western's better players two years ago and now is in his second year at Osgoode. Vipond is junior U.C.'s centre, eligible to play for Osgoode since it does not compete in a University league.

Smother Laval 7-2 Friday Night Play to 1-1 Draw With Carabins

Now undefeated in ten consecutive games, and sitting high atop the Intercollegiate standings with eleven points, the Hockey Blues returned from old Quebec yesterday with three of a possible four points; after walloping Laval 7-2 Friday night, and battling to a 1-1 draw with the University of Montreal in Verdun Saturday night. Dave Reid, Paul Knox, and Clare Fisher, the Blues' potent first line, increased their lead in the individual scoring race at the expense of Laval goaltender Raynald Lavoie, adding four points each to their totals.

Knox slammed in three goals against Laval, while Reid added two in an easy-going encounter with the last-place Red and Gold club. John Tolton, playing at left wing on the second line, scored one goal, and Johnny Akitt finally got the one he has been looking for in the last five games. Fisher assisted on four goals, to run his scoring total to eleven points in six games.

The Blues took a 2-0 lead in the first period, on goals by Reid and Tolton, and then added two more in the second from Reid and Knox. Ace winger Robert Lafreniere set up Maurice Lagace for the first Laval counter in the third frame at 2:07, and Lorne Arsenault got the other at 15:24.

Akitt got his counter at 3:58 and Knox finished out the scoring with two picture goals in the last four minutes. The Blues appeared to have little trouble in subduing the Frenchmen, and were even a little bit off in their shooting. Knox hit the goalpost three times in the wide-open struggle. Best performer on the weekend was netminder Hugh Curry who kicked out thirty-two Laval shots Friday night, and made twenty-six saves against the Carabins Saturday night.

In Verdun Saturday night the Blues ran into a hustling crew of Carabins, out to avenge the 7-2 beating given them in their last meeting with the Varsity's. The Carabins, who were evidently 'up' for this contest, began by employing the same tactics which gained them a 14-3 victory over last year's Blue team. Apparently these Frenchmen excel at three-man hockey, and their first object is to force the opposition to lose their tempers, get penalties, and then slam in three or four goals while playing three men to three. To this end they were unsuccessful, but the usual Blue scoring punch was lacking and the result was a 1-1 tie after ten minutes of overtime.

Claude Roy, filling in for the injured Claude Hotte, opened the scoring for the Carabins after a scoreless first period. Shifting through three Blue defenders, Roy outskated Red Stephen and fired in a twenty-foot drive from the wing with Blue defenceman Dave Jackson almost on top of him. Stephen tied it up at 18:12 of the second frame, on a pass from Paul Knox.

The Carabins were without star centre Bernie Quesnel, out with a dislocated shoulder, as well as bruising defenceman Jean Desrochers. Playing well above their heads, they entered the two overtime periods breathing fire, but met with a stubborn Blue defence, led by Bill Moreau, who put in one of their best shows to date. The Blue forwards had many scoring chances, but couldn't seem to put the puck in the net. Paul Knox broke away by himself in the third period and fired the puck wide of the Montreal goal. The two overtime frames were five minutes of straight time each, to allow the Blues to make the night train out of Montreal. The split of points moves the Carabins within one point of the idle McGill Redmen, and somewhat mars the clean record of the Varsity Club.

The Blues face the Carabins in a return match this Friday night in the Arena in what should prove to be a rough and tumble struggle. Still well in front of the pack, and seven points ahead of the second-place McGill Redmen, the Blues cannot afford to let up yet, and the balance of the schedule is likely to prove extremely interesting.

In spite of the fact that the Intramural Badminton meet was held last Tuesday and Wednesday at the Carleton Club, no decision has yet been forthcoming as to who has actually made the Varsity foursome. Three of the four players have been named, but it still remains undecided in what capacity two of those three players are to play.

The only gal who knows what she will be doing is Liz Rorke, Trinity 1 who is one of our double's players, but her partner still has not been chosen. There are three possible candidates for this other doubles' slot—they are Pat Godson, Marney Littlejohn, U.C. I, and Kay Smith, Nursing I.

Daphne Walker and Noreen Cossar will be playing singles for Toronto, but who is to be the first singles player is another unsettled question. This position will be definitely assigned later this month when the two girls meet in a final match.

The Intramural meet, in the opinion not only of Daphne Walker, Badminton curator, but also of the contestants was a great success. With over 35 entries, all the courts saw action. To top it all off, every match was keenly contested and the calibre of playing in nearly every match was above average.

With all this top-notch badminton material floating around Varsity, the Blue's chances of taking the Intercollegiate meet on Feb.

4 & 5 are excellent; however, to make this meet a success, not only from the possible winner's standpoint, but also from the looser's side, we have to have good, if not excellent badminton officials.

Any girls who have had any previous experience in officiating are asked to get in touch with Daphne Walker (MA 2576) or with the Women's Athletic Office. Your help is greatly needed and certainly will be appreciated.

En Garde — The women fencers have done it again. In their meet with Eaton's Girls Club they came out on top in five of the nine bouts, but in hits against, the picture is not as cheerful. John Andru, president of the male fencing club, who was the referee awarded 28 hits against Toronto, and only 25 against Timothy Eaton's girls.

There is an excellent chance that the girl fencers might enter the high and mighty realms of intercollegiate competition, but so far there has been no confirmation of a proposed trip to McGill on the weekend of the twelfth. Let's hope that the invitation comes through, so that it will give this under-rated sport the big boost that it needs.

Remember girls, if you are at all interested in fencing and would like to join the ranks of the Fairbanks family, just drop over to Lillian Massey any Wednesday afternoon around five for an hour of fun and fencing.

Ice Seconds Will Meet Ryerson This Afternoon

The Intermediate hockey squad returns to action this afternoon at the arena clashing with this year's edition of the Ryerson Rams. This is the first meeting of these cross-town rivals this season and the Rams will be out to prove that they are not the Lambs on ice that they were on the football field. In hockey action last year the two teams emerged even, splitting the two encounters.

Ryerson's smooth-playing, hard skating forward trio of Garcello, Prescott, and McKiver, back from last year's club, have proven to be the Rams' top offensive unit to date and will be out to continue their scoring ways against Varsity. With several strong Freshmen additions to the team this year, including defenceman Doug Leggett last year captain of the Ridley College squad, the Rams will ice an even more powerful team than last season. To their credit to date Ryerson has smothered O.A.C. -16-2 although losing to the Western club, that dropped the Intermediates, 7-2. The loss to the Mustangs in London is not a solid indication of the strength of the team though as their top forward line failed to make the trip to a man.

Varsity emerged from their defeat in London without any serious injuries and will face Ryerson with the same line-up. Leading goal getter for the Intermediates to date has been Ted Lotocki but most notable in the scoring column has been the failure of other forwards to produce as expected. While it is quite likely that Varsity will be able to defeat Western on the larger ice surface of Varsity Arena it is also quite likely that they will not be as fortunate in securing even a split with Ryerson. With the increased strength of the Rams this year the Intermediates will be forced to battle all the way to register a win.

Wrestlers Beaten by OAC Lose to Western Saturday

The University of Toronto Senior Wrestling team went to Guelph and London on Thursday and Saturday last week to meet their heaviest opposition to date this season. They lost 23-15 to the OAC squad, and without four of their regular seniors, lost again at Western on Saturday, by a score of 23-18. Western's score here included 5 points free, when Toronto failed to place a competitor in the 191 lbs. class.

Intermediate teams accompanied both trips. In Guelph the JV's won 28-15, counting 15 points picked up on OAC defaults, while in London the intermediates lost 15-10, on the basis of only five matches; when neither Varsity nor Western placed men in the other four weight classes.

RESULTS AT WESTERN

Wally Kami-Takahara, (T), 123 lbs, gave Toronto an early lead of five points, pinning Dick Hobbs, (W), in the third round of the first match. Freeman Roth, (T), 130 lbs, subbing for regular senior Jack McQuat, lost by a fall to Ken Leyshorn, (W). Gord Stephenson, (T), 137 lbs, pinned Jim Brown, (W) in the third round. Ray Smith, (T), 147 lbs, decided Lorne Hunter, (W), on points after nine minutes.

Paul Hickey, (T), down to the 157 lbs class from the 167 he has fought all year, pinned Bob Campbell (W) in the second round. Orle Loucks, (T), fighting at 187 lbs from his regular 157 lbs, lost a decision to Jim Neale, (W), by a 4-2 score on points in nine minutes.

John Wesley, subbing for Bob Waugh, 177 lbs, injured at the OAC meet, lost by a fall to Bill Turchan, (W). With this match the score on the meet stood at 18-13 for Toronto. In absence of both senior Don Cheeseman, 191 lbs, and intermediate Harvey Salem, Western picked up five points for default, to tie the score. Mike Vasko, heavyweight, subbing for regular senior Harry Robinson, lost by a fall to Chuck Vaucrosson, (W), in the second round, to make the final score 23-18.

Issues

There will be four issues of The Varsity published this week on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. After this, The Varsity will be published three-times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday for the next four weeks.

A continuing decline in SAC funds allocated to The Varsity has forced this reduced publishing schedule.

Bloody Cup at Stake Also 'Skule?' Cannon

Today the University of Toronto Blood Campaign commences. The Corpuscule Cup, which is now held by Mount Allison University, is at stake. All donations will be taken at the new School of Nursing, 50 St. George St. The blood given is added to the Red Cross Blood Bank, and is used for civilian disasters or war services.

Besides the Corpuscule Cup, which was donated last year by the Forestry Club of UBC, the Skule Cannon is offered to the winning faculty at the University of Toronto.

Last year Forestry won the interfaculty competition, although Skule provided the most donors. Toronto was a long way behind the percentage of donations of other universities.

Don't let Toronto down this year. It doesn't hurt to give blood, but it certainly can save many lives. Let's have 100 percent student turn-out this year!

Hoop Blues Victorious

to their exceptional speed, wholly befuddled the fading Devils and made the Varsitytypes masters of the play.

A slow start at the beginning of the season made George Stulac one of the team's big worries for this year. A magnificent game against Lawrence proved him to be still the best man in Intercollegiate ball. Rebounding effectively, setting up plays with smooth skill and shooting only when he couldn't pass to a teammate in better position, George hit for 21 points and was the best man on the floor, going both ways.

Outstanding man for the visitors, after high-scoring Walt Dzurus whose 22 points was the night's top, was Jim Johnson, a smallish man who served as the playmaker for the Tech team and had the Blues on their toes all the time with his sharp ball-hawking ways. Johnson threw in a mere 5 points but set up several dozen more.

Varsity's great disadvantage seemed to lie in the relatively small size of their first string. The Blues made up for this with their speed, still it took half the game for Don Fawcett, Pete Potter and Leo Madden to break loose from the taller opposition. Once loose, Madden hit for 17, Fawcett for 13 and Potter the same.

For the Tech club Dzurus and Dawson were the only big men, Dawson getting 13 to go with Dzurus' 22 and Stan Sylvester marking up 10. Better than a third of the Lawrence scoring was done in free throws, but even the 3 point edge they held in this department wasn't enough.

BLUE BITS: . . . T.V. network scouts at the game were impressed with the work of Bill "Corcorallen". One scout was heard to remark, "Who is that guy?" . . . Art Binnington, recently recovered from a back injury, was outstanding under the hoop on rebounds . . . Blues go with Mac at home on Wednesday.

McGill Boxers Best Sr. Blues Win Six Bouts

The Varsity boxing team fell before a powerful McGill crew in Montreal as the Toronto boxers won only two out of the eight scheduled bouts. The McGill coach, apparently without notifying the Varsity coach, had the length of the periods shortened from two minutes to one and a half minutes.

In the 175 pound division, Tony Canzano stopped his boy Charlie Gonzales from continuing to fight Ossie Downes of McGill. Downes threw a number of rabbit punches which escaped the notice of the referee.

RESULTS

Students' Petition Being Circulated Ask Extension Wallace Room Closing

"We, the undersigned, have conferred with other students and agreed that it would be much more convenient for all the students if the Wallace Room were open till eleven o'clock p.m. rather than ten. We feel that since most students study usually from eight till eleven in the evening, they would use the building more if longer hours were adopted."

This is the text of a petition passed around the campus last week. It was originated by London House of the UC residence, particularly by Richard Kalinowski and Ross Lindon, "to give students a properly quiet place to study in the evenings."

The Wallace Room is presently open till 9 p.m., but at the last meeting of the SAC, it was agreed that the Library be asked to stay open till ten o'clock. This the Librarian H. H. Blackburn has agreed to do. It was further stated that the library would not be open at all till eleven this year because of staff problems.

Kalinowski felt, however, that if only the Wallace Room were kept open, there would only be one staff member required to look after it. From the UC residence, the petition was circulated around the campus. "Very few refused to sign," said Kalinowski.

The University College Lit and the WUA have both passed resolutions recommending that the library be kept open until 11.

1735 Significant To Torontonians

It is the opinion of Professor Maurice Careless of the University of Toronto history department that the controversial hotel room number will stick longer in the public's minds than dates of real historic importance.

Professor Careless told the Toronto Rotary Club that Torontonians know more about the number 1735 than they do about 1793, the year when this city was founded.

Careless commented that citizens of Toronto complain loud and long about the muddy street caused by the subway.

"Back in 1810," said the professor, "a citizen walked down muddy York and saw a new felt hat lying in the middle of the street. Walking over, he picked it up, and a voice said: 'Am I ever glad you came along. Now help me get my horse out, he's suffocating.'"

It is incidents like this that make a city, declared Dr. Careless. "But how many people in Toronto care to know about it?" he asked. "The haste for progress is wiping out our historical landmarks."

Debut of Social Workers Canadian University TV

On Sunday evening, February 6, at 6:00 p.m., the University of Toronto School of Social Work will make its debut on the Canadian University TV series, EXPLORING MINDS.

On three successive Sunday evenings the School will present a Trilogy on Social Work Education. The focus of the programmes is on student learning rather than faculty teaching. The audience will be taken out into the community and the reality of the field agency where the student attempts to apply some of the learning of the classroom to real-life situations.

The three settings are quite different. The first, entitled This Man Is My Lesson, is set in the School of Social Work and the Toronto Department of Public Welfare.

Ten Year Old Teachers, the February 13 programme will centre on field work at the York Community House of the Toronto Neighbourhood Workers Association. This is a community centre which serves the group life needs of individuals and families in the area.

The third programme, on February 20, will feature field work at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

These three programmes can be seen over CBC-TV in the following cities: Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Kitchener, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Governors, Not Students To Decide Student Activities' Fee Increases
Smith Announces In Annual Report

The Governors of the University of Toronto—and not the students—have the final voice in deciding whether the budget for student activities shall be raised, President Sidney Smith asserted in his annual report released yesterday.

Dr. Smith declared that the governors had every right to refuse an increase in fees earmarked for student activities and added:

"Any suggestion that such action by the Board constitutes interference with the students' rights to self-government is preposterous."

The allotment for student activities had already been increased — proportionally speaking — to a greater degree than tuition fees, the President declared.

During the fiscal year 1953-54, slightly more than $200,000 had been turned over to meet student activities budgets, Dr. Smith's report stated. (This figure represents a percentage of all monies turned into Simcoe Hall under the title of tuition fees.)

NFCUS Approved

Halifax—(CUP) — Dalhousie University students decided overwhelmingly (399-60) today to remain members of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

The vote followed a student forum on the NFCUS question and climaxed a campaign by the Dalhousie NFCUS committee. Dalhousie delegates to the Canada-wide NFCUS conference last fall had balked at the 50-cent fee. But the Council President assured the student body that the funds were available for the fee increase.

Gord Hurlburt May Decide

The Fate of NFCUS

By STAFF WRITER

The fate of the National Federation of Canadian University Students on this campus will be decided at the SAC meeting next Wednesday night. Colleges and faculties are already lining up on the question of whether the SAC should—or can afford to pay the increased NFCUS fee of 50 cents per student next year.

If the SAC does not decide Wednesday to guarantee to the NFCUS Executive that it will pay the increased fee next year, Toronto will be out of the National Students' Organization on the 31st of January.

(The fact that in order to stay in NFCUS the SAC is supposed to give definite assurance to NFCUS by the end of the month that next year's NFCUS fees will be paid raises an interesting point. This year's SAC cannot bind the next year's SAC, and hence no such definite assurance about next year's NFCUS fees can be given.)

The figures in the above box give the number of votes that each faculty and college will cast in the decision. Each college or faculty will cast as many votes as there are students in it, if the vote is a representative one; otherwise the first six colleges and faculties above will receive two votes each and the rest one.

These figures show that the campus pro-NFCUS forces have taken an early but not a commanding lead in the battle to keep Toronto in NFCUS. Adding the votes of 750-odd UC men, whose executive is expected to favor staying in NFCUS, the vote is now about 3,500 to 1,700 for remaining in NFCUS.

However, the big question mark is Engineering, with its close to 2,000 votes. If the Engineering Society votes against the proposal to stay in NFCUS, it is probable that its vote, together with the anti-NFCUS votes already decided and the votes of the smaller professional faculties who are also expected to turn thumbs down on NFCUS, will be sufficient to kick Toronto out of the National organization.

The way in which the Engineering votes — all 1,819 of them — will be cast seems to depend on one man — Gord Hurlburt, the SAC NFCUS Chairman who together with Al Waldon, the SAC Finance Commissioner — represent SPS on the SAC.

Waldon is known to oppose NFCUS, while Hurlburt is one of its strongest supporters on the Campus. If each man votes according to his own wishes, they will cancel each other's votes out as each man casts one-half of the total SPS votes.

If this happens, NFCUS will almost certainly be passed by the SAC.

However, the Executive of the Engineering Society is known to be opposed — almost unanimously — to Toronto's membership in NFCUS. The point then arises, can the Engineering Society mandate Hurlburt to vote against NFCUS, and vote himself out of a job? If they can, the SPS votes should be enough to send NFCUS down to defeat. If they cannot, indications are that NFCUS will pass the SAC with flying colors as the SPS votes then will be split and cancel each other out.

On the question of whether the Engineering Society Executive can mandate Hurlburt, there is no clear agreement.

Baby Blues Register 4-4 Draw
In Rough Contest with Ryerson

By FRED GRAY

In Intermediate hockey yesterday afternoon Varsity and Ryerson battled to a 4-4 draw. In a hard fought game that saw the officials give free rein to their imagination, the Varsity Intermediates took a four goal lead only to have the Rams slug their way to a tie before the final whistle.

Varsity scored their opening counter at the 9:30 mark of the first period. George Rantis netting the goal on Tom Riley's pass. Joe Walker gave Varsity a two goal lead as he and Bill Naylor combined to score. The Blue and White squad played a strong game through the first period keeping the Ryerson attack disorganized. Joe Walker, Bill Naylor, lor, and Don Borthwick were the top forward line in this period, as well as throughout most of the game, until attacked in earnest by the little official with the big whistle.

Varsity continued to add to their total in the second frame, Bill Naylor dropping in Don Borthwick's pass as he and Herb Tilson set up the score. Ian Morrison rounded out the Intermediate's points scoring from John Casey and Herb Tilson. Ryerson entered the scoring column when given a 2 man advantage via the penalty route. The Rams scored twice in a matter of 15 seconds to bounce back into the game. Joe Howes proved to be the big man in the Ryerson attack, collecting the first unassisted and setting up the second for Scarcello.

Ryerson continued their scoring ways in the third period as Wong counted the third from Howes at 12:16. Scarcello, finally tallied the equalizer less than three minutes later and the teams battled from here on equal terms. Varsity did everything short of scoring in the final minutes of play, missing several shots on the unprotected Ryerson net.

That man Al Fleming was again a standout in the Varsity net, playing it like the proverbial cucumber to thwart two breakaways by the Rams. Walker, Naylor, and Borthwick were tops for the Intermediates until handicuffed by a maze of penalties.

Skule Tops Meds

Wide-open hockey was contrasted with the close-checking variety as first place was the prize, in both games of yesterday's noon-hour action.

In the opener, Sr. SPS played kitty-bar-the-door for the last ten minutes to beat Sr. Meds, 2-1, solidifying their Group I leadership. The fast-skating second game saw Jr. Vic take over undisputed first place in Group II, dumping Jr. Skule, 5-2.

The line of Davison, Harrison and Cruise paced Sr. Skule to their fifth straight victory which saw all scoring occur in the hard-hitting first period. Davison took a relay from Harrison to open scoring for the Engineers at the ten minute mark. He was in the clear from centre as the Med defence was caught changing.

Seven minutes later, the honors were reversed as Davison decoyed a lone defender to the left boards and dumped a pass to Harrison who romped in alone to beat Walker.

Duff bagged the lone Med marker at the 18:20 mark, banking one off Skule defenseman Bannister's skate from a scramble.

Action in the second period slowed to a walk, as SPS laid down a checking barrage that all but frustrated the Doctor's attack. Cruise, Bannister and Harrison played strong defensive hockey in this stanza, though Walters, Fowler and Walsh managed to give Skule goalie Lister a few anxious moments.

Vic Jrs. led 3-0 after the first period, on markers by Allport, Barker and Williams. In the second, Koshan and Bertram of Vic traded goals with Topping and Wilson of Jr. Skule. Goalkeeper Tanner played a solid game for Vic, aided by the defensive work of McClean, Gray, Bielawski and Surtel were best for Skule.

Blues Meeting Marauders
In Hart House Wednesday

Hardly begun, the Intercollegiate Basketball League is very close to a final settlement of position and the championship. Only two teams stand in serious contention at the moment. The title choices have to be the Western Mustangs or the Varsity Blues, previously favoured Assumption having been put well behind by a double loss to Queen's and McGill this past weekend. Unfortunately, the structure of Intercollegiate competition being what it is, two losses in a season are enough to remove a team from effective contention.

The Blues play their second League game of the year this Wednesday in Hart House when they meet the McMaster Marauders. The Macmen, somewhat weaker this year than last, have already lost one game to the Blues, that by a 20 point margin. Important fact for predicting the outcome of this game is that the Blues were able to beat the Marauders last time on a strange court, with the team a disorganized unit whereas this game will see them at top form. It should be a double victory for Varsity with Mac Seniors and Juniors going under by better than 30 points in the Junior and some 25 or 30 in the Senior.

Mr. President...

In his annual report, which has just been released, President Smith has expressed a deep concern over the standards which must be maintained in an institution of higher learning such as this.

We heartily applaud his declaration that new buildings and facilities are needed for this university. We second his call for more better-trained teachers for universities.

Throughout his report, the President has shown wisdom and a vast experience with educational and intellectual problems.

However, we might have wished that he had taken a more liberal view of the duties, responsibilities, and rights of student self-government. —RDE

THE PRESIDENT REPORTS

The stories on this page deal exclusively with the 260-page annual report of University of Toronto President Sidney Smith released yesterday. The President discusses such topics as university finance, student rights, and the possibility of a cut in enrolment.

... On Buildings

Adequate buildings and equipment are necessary for the integrated functioning of a university, said President Sidney Smith in his report yesterday.

President Smith listed seven buildings as most urgently needed for the functioning of the University. These were, in order of priority, a music building, a school of law, a school of architecture, a Zoology building, an Arts building, a Nursing residence, and a Physical and Occupational Therapy Building.

A music building was suggested by Dean Boyd Neel of the Faculty of Music in his report. Without an immediate prospect of improved accommodation, said President Smith, it will not be possible to retain a first-rate staff in the Faculty.

An increase in students, the inadequate facilities of the present Law Library, and provision for graduate work in law all intensify the need for better facilities for the School of Law, he said. The present environment of the School of Architecture is "hardly in accord with the principles of design," the president said. Since 1925, there have been no major additions to the facilities of the school. In the same period, enrolment has increased five times. For these reasons, he said, a school of architecture is necessary.

The Department of Zoology is in a seventy-year old building now. Other science departments have been given better facilities, he said, and now it is Zoology's turn.

An arts building behind Flavelle House, he said, would provide facilities for all non-science departments in the University to be grouped together. Provision could also be made here for a Graduate Studies Wing.

Because of insufficient funds, a nursing residence was not built when the new School of Nursing building went up. The lack of this residence is detrimental to the educational programme of the school, he said.

"The temporary buildings which now accommodate the division of Physical and Occupational Therapy (were) acquired from the Army in 1946 . . . (and) will have to be replaced by a more satisfactory permanent structure," he said.

NOTE: President Smith made no mention of a rocket-launching platform or a Student's Union.

... On University Finances

More money is being spent on prisoners in Canadian penitentiaries today than on students in Canadian universities, President Sidney Smith's report shows. In 1952, Canadian universities spent $953 per student. In 1951, the government spent $1,677 for each individual in federal penitentiaries.

"Surely it is not unreasonable," he said, "to suggest that we might be prepared to spend as much on the inmates of our universities as we do on those of our penitentiaries." If we were so prepared, university administrators, instead of devoting precious hours to harassed manoeuvres and humiliating penny-pinching, could attend to their proper job; the provision of the best conditions under which the best men and women can instruct the best students".

The President stated that total university revenue from all sources in Canada in 1952 was slightly more than $48,000,000.

"These measures — the recruitment of the best staff and the best students and the maintenance of good working conditions for both — call for energy and foresight. They call also for a great deal more money than is now allotted to universities," he said. "... surely the time has come when (the universities) need no longer resort to special pleading (for money). Their strength and the strength of society are one and indivisible; to nourish them inadequately is to contribute directly to our intellectual and cultural malnutrition."

The President

... On Slash In Enrolment

A move to pare down student enrolment here may be felt in the near future, it was hinted in President Sidney Smith's annual report released over the weekend. But the threat did not appear on the immediate horizon.

The President reiterated a suggestion made in last year's report that a scholastic aptitude test be given all candidates wishing to enter the university.

Although he did not state directly that the University of Toronto would limit its enrolment, the President pointed to overcrowded conditions in most Canadian universities and said:

"It is in no mood of pertinacity that several of them (universities) have resolved to limit their enrolment. The mood is one of self-preservation, or rather, preservation of the integrity and effectiveness of their work."

Pointing to a doubling in school-age population in Canada since 1945, President Smith declared that he believed the instigation of a scholastic aptitude test to be given to students wishing to enter university might help in selecting those best suited for such training.

The President declared that too many Canadian university students were failing courses and that although admission requirements had been raised, still the problem appeared not to have been met.

The President declared that the university in a democracy is a necessity and that there was no room for aristocracy of class and privilege but that there was a place for the aristocracy of talent.

"I propose," he said, "that Canadian universities experiment with the Scholastic Aptitude Test, and use it as an adjunct to the departmental examinations along with a report from the principal or headmaster."

"The test appears to have a predictive value," he continued, "which we cannot afford to ignore, in view of the unsatisfactory percentage of failures in the freshman year in Canadian universities."

The President declared that careful selection of talented students — and not necessarily those with money — could increase the output of graduates from Canadian colleges up to 20 percent more than at present.

... On Teaching

A relaxation in requirements for secondary teachers was hinted in Dr. S. Smith's annual report. With an increase of 100,000 high school pupils expected in the next ten years, the provinces will need an additional 4,000 teachers," he said. The present set-up in the honour courses does not facilitate the production of the teachers in demand, especially in mathematics and science.

Prerequisites for Type A Specialist courses are reported to have changed. Graduates in appropriate honour courses (science subjects) may enrol for the courses with 60 per cent in their final year, instead of the former 66 per cent. Graduates with suitable subjects can make up admission requirements in one additional year instead of the two formerly needed.

Honour science courses are set up to produce only research personnel, where they should also be producing second class honour graduates who could fulfill functions in industry and fill high school teaching posts.

Undergrad Sports Being Reviewed By U. Committee

Compulsory physical education for students in their first or first two years is being studied by a special committee, said Dr. Smith in his report. Intramural sports are the base on which intercollegiate competition is founded, he said. Professor Stevens of the School of Physical and Health Education states that the increase in voluntary athletic participation in upper years is due to the early compulsory programme.

... On Engineers and Education

Many Engineering students now studying at this and at other Canadian Universities would be better trained in technical institutes, said President Smith in his annual report.

Referring to the report of Dean Tupper of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering (which is also contained in the Report), the President said that the vast increase in the number of applicants for courses in Engineering, together with the vast and growing demand for Engineering Graduates, means that there is a serious danger that the Engineering Faculty will grow too large and unwieldy.

To avoid this, the President suggests that serious consideration be given to the establishment or extension of Polytechnic Institutes in this Province.

President Smith stated that, considering the very high failure rates in the first year of the Engineering course (32% in 1952-53, 28% in 1953-54), it was necessary to re-examine the basis of teaching Applied Science in the university.

The President attributed many of the failures to the inability of the students to cope with the more difficult work, especially in the basic subjects of mathematics and sciences, yet these subjects, he said, could not be made easier without lowering professional standards.

The President referred to an Engisun Report, which had considered that separate technical institutes should provide society with the Engineering Technicians, while the University should concentrate on those who will fill the higher ranks of the profession, especially those who excel in theory, leadership, and investigation.

Dr. Smith said: "Any request from any student organization to have its compulsory fee increased by the Board of Governors must be considered by the Board in the light of several factors: 'the burden of other student expenses; the wisdom of any proposed extension of student activities; the budget of the student organization; and the fact that student organization fees have already been increased to a greater extent (proportionally speaking) than tuition fees.'"

In his comments on student organizations, the President said that while the non-curricular affairs of the student body were not "extraneous to the educational undertakings of the university" . . . they could not, however, be given a stand under the main tent.

"We must be constantly aware that the colleges, faculties, schools and institutes are educational units not designed to promote that rah-rah spirit which pervades the Hollywood version of an institution of higher learning," Dr. Smith declared.

Dean Tupper, in suggesting another solution to the problem, said that arrangements had already been made with other colleges and technical institutes to have these bodies teach the first two years of the engineering course to the student before he came to Toronto.

Dean Tupper said that this would enable the university to make better use of its technical teaching equipment, which is mostly used in the final two years of the courses. However, he said that difficulties might arise when students had to divide up their course between two institutions. This plan would have the result of increasing the enrolment in the last two years at SPS, while drastically lowering it in the first two years.

Dean Tupper said that after the next ten years there might be 2,400 students applying annually at SPS — double the number that was once thought to be optimum.

Dean Tupper also suggested that the following are some of the reasons why engineers come to university:

- the easiest thing to do after Grade XIII
- parental pressure
- a university degree helps to get a good job
- his parents can afford to send him
- it would be a 'wonderful experience'
- it would postpone for four or five years the necessity of earning a living.

Fate of NFCUS

just regained its constitution from the faculty, and it is evidently changed in some ways from the old constitution. As yet, no one has gone over the SPS Society constitution with a fine-tooth comb to see if the Executive does have the power to mandate Hurlburt.

Other colleges and faculty societies do have this power, but there is no authority as to whether SPS has.

The SAC constitution seems to be silent on this one point. However, there is one small paragraph in the SAC constitution that deals with Representative Voting which the Engineering Society Executive may make use of. Each faculty or college is allowed to divide its votes between its SAC reps (if it has more than one) in any manner it sees fit.

If the SPS Executive finds that they cannot mandate Hurlburt, they may re-divide the 1,800 votes of SPS to give Walton, the anti-NFCUS rep, the vast bulk of the votes, and leave Hurlburt only a few to east. The SPS votes are now divided evenly between the two.

Many people have expressed the feeling that if Toronto resigns from NFCUS, the organization will fold. Others have said that if Toronto stays in NFCUS at the increased fee, campus activities must suffer from lack of funds.

Therefore, it seems that on the vote of Gordon Hurlburt, IV SPS (and on the efforts of the Engineering Society to control that vote at its meeting this afternoon), depend the fate of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, and of many of the SAC - sponsored student activities.

Such developments, involving the investment of millions of dollars, are a must at Inco because men with hand shovels just could not move 50,000 tons of ore each day.

Machines like the "slusher" are safe, efficient tools and are absolutely necessary to the profitable operation of great mines like Inco's.

After 2-week Referendum SAC Remains In NFCUS

The University of Toronto will stay in NFCUS. As a result of a two-week campus-wide survey, the Students' Administrative Council decided, by a vote of 20 to 5, that a continued membership in the National Federation of Canadian University Students was worth the required expense, despite the additional strain this puts on the budget.

The question of whether or not the decision will result in a possible curtailment of local student activities has not yet been answered.

In pre-voting discussion, Arnold Bayley said that the Medical Society approved the motion "with great reservation as to the effectiveness of NFCUS in its present state."

Ian Scott, St. Michael's, stated that he would oppose the motion, "not because I do not support NFCUS, but because at the last national conference we agreed to remain in NFCUS only if we obtained a fee raise from the Board of Governors."

"So far," continued Scott, "no attempt has been made to obtain this raised fee. Therefore I feel compelled to vote against the motion."

The Dental representative, Joe Slogan, confessed that he did not know the official opinion of Dental Parliament on the issue. However, he quoted an editorial from the University of Western Ontario Gazette, which commented on the attitude of this paper to the issue. "We are quite honestly ashamed of the Varsity", quoted Slogan, who added "I might say I concur."

The recorded vote resulted in 20 to 5 in support of the motion: "That the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto expresses the desire to maintain membership in NFCUS at the membership fee of 20 cents per student as budgeted for during 1954-55 and that for the year 1955-56, this council will budget from its increased revenue on the basis of 50 cents per student to NFCUS to conform to the uniform national membership fee."

Trinity approved the motion "with a bit of idealism"; St. Michael's Men rejected it "with great disappointment in the executives of this SAC."

S.P.S. voted "Fortunately, yes." Architecture approved the membership at a percentage of 186 to 1; Forestry disapproved it at 95 to 5.

The five faculties opposing the motion were Victoria Men and Women, St. Michael's Men, Forestry and Pharmacy.

The immediate result of this motion will be a continuation of Toronto's membership in the national organization. The source of "its increased revenues," however, has not yet been realized, and a fee raise from the Board of Governors does not appear to be forthcoming.

O'Keefe's May Invade The Royal Conservatory

The Royal Conservatory of Music may soon become the site of the new $12,000,000 civic auditorium which the O'Keefe Brewing Company has offered to build for Toronto.

Less than 24 hours after the offer of O'Keefe's became known, Boyd Neel, dean of music at the Royal Conservatory, suggested that the project should be combined with the plans of the University to provide a new music building.

Mr. Neel pointed out that the site is one of the most advantageous in the city for the proposed civic centre, and that the only barrier which has kept the University from supplying the much-needed construction for the Conservatory has been lack of funds.

The Chairman of the University Board of Governors, Col. W. E. Phillips, said unofficially that "we would probably jump at anything that would give us the type of accommodation we want at no cost."

The proposed arrangement would comprise a building accommodating 10,000 persons, with underground parking facilities, providing adequate facilities for the Royal Conservatory, as well as a public auditorium for the city.

The original plan submitted to the mayor by O'Keefe's called for the selection and expropriation of a suitable "central downtown area," to be turned over to O'Keefe's at cost, and an immediate start on the project.

In making the offer, M. J. Kelly, president of O'Keefe's, said that the centre would be financed and operated by a non-profit organization — the O'Keefe Centre Foundation — and he suggested as a name the O'Keefe Civic Auditorium.

In the recent President's Report of the University, Dean Neel stressed that "the major problem as regards the Royal Conservatory is lack of adequate space to perform its many functions successfully."

"The crying need for this institution," continued Mr. Neel, "is adequate premises for the performance of its functions. . . . There is no auditorium capable of holding an audience and orchestra of even moderate dimensions."

The Conservatory Dean suggested that such a rebuilding might pay for itself, "if undertaken in conjunction with a commercial enterprise . . . of a size and quality sufficient for the levels, he stated there is the great danger that not only will natural gas be priced out of the North, but that even Southern Ontario will find the price too high, leaving the only alternative of export to the U.S.A. He feels that Queens Park has given in to pressure from private business with the result that a golden opportunity to develop the North has been passed up.

Mr. MacDonald says that he believes Ontario needs a "man who can resist pressure."

Ontario Socialist Leader Claims Centralization Ontario's Problem

The problem of centralization of industry in Ontario was the theme of a talk given by Donald MacDonald, Ontario Leader of the CCF Party, to the U of T CCF Club yesterday. He noted that where Northern Ontario had once been thought to be a dividing line in Canada, it was now realized that due to its great wealth, this part of Ontario could be a connecting link in Canada.

Unfortunately, he said, southern Ontario contains one third of the Canadian market and is in close proximity to a vast American market. This has resulted in a great centralization of industry in southern Ontario, with the result that Northern Ontario, and Eastern Ontario also have been left out of the great post-war economic boom. Mr. MacDonald criticized the Ontario Government for doing nothing more than suggest that new industries look to Northern Ontario.

The CCF leader said that he feels that decentralization is the only answer and that a planned economy, which is incompatible with free enterprise, is also necessary.

Unless this is done, unless the government spends public money in developing the north, Northern Ontario will be an economic liability in Canada, he stated.

Mr. MacDonald cited the Natural Gas issue as an example of how the present government in Ontario is following a negative policy in Northern development.

Smith Would Alter Arts Exam. System

President Smith recommended the establishment of boards to review the examination papers set by the 17 University Arts Departments to ensure that a reasonable standard is maintained. The President also suggested that the assistance of external examiners might be sought.

However, his proposals have evidently not met with an enthusiastic response from the professors affected. President Smith said "I regret that these proposals have not had a warmer reception. External examiners have not been resented as an affront to the teaching staff in Oxford or Cambridge".

Tea and Sympathy

The task of dishing out tea and sympathy can get one into more than a kettle full of hot water if it is undertaken with sincerity. The implications of fulfilling this part of being a master's wife in a residential college are drawn in Robert Anderson's Tea and Sympathy now playing at the Royal Alexandra.

Laura Reynolds, the master's wife, finds herself the only one in sympathy with Tom Lee, "an off-horse", who is being persecuted by fellow students and masters because he is considered to be a fairy. In his loneliness and bewilderment, he tries anything to reinstate his manhood and become one of the in-group. When all efforts fail, Laura feels that it is her responsibility to help him in whatever way she can. Her resultant actions conflict with the conventional and social idea of good. "Good, in what sense of the word?" she queries. Her solution corresponding to her personal "good" will probably conflict with the "goods" of many of the audience but there is no doubt that as Laura says of Shaw's Candida "he makes it seem right, don't you think?"

Far from being philosophic about this situation, Anderson's play is convincingly human and realistic. He may touch on the problems of individuality and nonconformity, of adolescent SEX, of the power of gossip, of the marriage relationship, of morality and of student staff relationships, but one is not conscious of it apart from personal terms. We see the "horny bastards" piled up on Tom's bed to spy on a woman feeding her child, we see Tom's embarrassment at having a woman's part in the play even though it is the best part and we watch the evidence of hearsay and prejudice building up against him.

This production of Elia Kazan is the same in direction, lighting and set as the one in New York, but with a different cast. It was very impressive as I saw it there.

but even more so with Deborah Kerr and Don Dubbins than with Joan Fontaine and Anthony Perkins in the lead roles. Miss Kerr's Laura is a much more sensitive and spontaneous person. Except for the occasions when she fell into declaiming lines her response to Tom Lee's sufferings and her honesty with herself were quite believable. Miss Kerr could think with him in the part, not merely about him. The other students, all well-adjusted sorts, provided a lively relief with their energetic portrayal of the commonplaces of residence life, particularly Joe Di Reda as Tom's roommate, Al.

The one jarring note in the cast was Maurice Manson as Herbert Lee, Tom's father. He seemed to ignore the personal implications of his part and played it for comic interest alone.

The set is admirably designed for the action of the play. There is the tea-and-sympathy room on the left hand side, and up a winding stair suggesting the rest of the house, Tom's typically small room. This arrangement not only helps the movement of the play but allows for the audience to see Tom while he is being talked about and to see Laura yearning for him yet separated.

An exciting play and an exciting production of it.

has the talent of expressive movement: her body speaks even when she is silent.

The performance of Don Dubbins as Tom was quite outstanding. He established from the start an individual way of expressing himself that was the personality of one Tom Lee and yet was the embodiment of all that he was to represent. And then he was consistent to this pattern to such a degree that one

Euripides' Hippolytus

The U.C. Player's Guild will present a dramatic reading of Euripides' Hippolytus, Monday, January 31, directed by Professor Shepherd of the Classics Department, Curt Reis, who performed in The Fall of the City will be playing Hippolytus, Charlotte Schragger, who played in Miss Julie for the Guild earlier this year, will be playing Phaedra, Alene Kamins, who acted in Gill's Darkness at Noon, will be playing Aphrodite.

Although the story is taken from an ancient legend, the Euripidean treatment is extremely subtle and modern while the formal conventions of earlier drama are observed. The play begins with the Goddess of love, Aphrodite, forcing Phaedra to become infatuated with her stepson Hippolytus, an illegitimate son of her husband. The play ends with the death of Hippolytus after the suicide of Phaedra and the appearance of Artemis who reconciles father and son.

Shepherd says of this play: "This grim tale of human conflicts may be interpreted in various ways: We may accept the reality of the goddesses or see them as symbols of the destructive power of the human emotions. We may view Phaedra as simply a pawn in the game or as the central figure of the tragedy; and against the formal innocence and purity of Hippolytus we must weigh his fundamental sins of self-righteousness and spiritual pride."

To the Aspiring Teacher

Qualifications, Methods, Future and All

By BOB DUNCAN

Before undertaking the serious profession of instructing elementary or secondary school children, there are certain things of which the aspiring teacher should be aware. First of all, have you considered other easier occupations such as steeple-jacking, big-game hunting, log-rolling or sand-hogging? If you have and you still want to take up teaching, here is some useful information.

The teacher is a person of certain qualifications, who knows a few more of the right and wrong answers than his class. The class is a group of some forty-odd innocuous looking barbarians, who are relentless in their programme of undermining a teacher's confidence and in securely sealing his doom. Their bright little minds, which cannot remember a historical date for five minutes, can devise tortures for the unfortunate instructor, which make the Inquisitions look like a Sunday School picnic. There is also a duster, a pointer, and some flaky pieces of chalk. Dusters are used for the purpose of turning the prof's new blue serge into a snappy charcoal grey. The pointer is to be broken (preferably over a moppet's fingers). Chalk is a most interesting writing device which oftentimes sounds its call, not unlike the plaintive wail of a goosed banshee.

Now I should like to explain the proper method of procedure in tricky situations such as; a—When the student asks a question that you are not sure of.—Freeze the face with pensive appearance, sway delicately from one foot to another. Compliment him on his keen perception, and assure him that you were bringing that up on the morrow. (Make a note to get even with the little jerk.) b—when the student suggests an alternative method to a problem (such as in geometry)—equivocate quickly. Brand the young upstart as a reactionary. What is good enough for the rest has to be good enough for him. (Make a note to get even.)

Once in a while you will be confronted with a situation which requires direct methods of punishment. Since the good old-fashioned methods (rod, whip, rock, iron-maiden) have been done away with, I suggest these few to take their place. (1) Refusal to teach—highly ineffective. Merely leads to shouts of glee, and caustic remarks such as "you were teaching before?" (2) Backhand slap—very effective. Consists of a well-placed smash on someone almost entirely out of your line of vision. Catches the culprit unawares. (3) Ear flick—highly effective

—let your fingernails grow to the required length and carefully aim a devastating flick at the exposed ear. (4) Man to man—most effective. This technique requires a paternal spirit. Tell the child that you would like to talk over the problem man to man or father to son. Place the right arm in an affectionate embrace around the lad's neck, and as you talk, delicately break his shoulder.

These methods should allow you to keep things under control.

If you are worried about your future in this rack—oops, trade, read these findings of Hackeschlemer and Funk, a team of eminent psychologists. H and F followed the career of two young teachers from their first day to the present—a period of five years. H and Funk asked the young men to encompass their feelings in an open letter. They are dutifully printed below. A: "I have been teach-teaching s-school for high on to five years, and I c-can honestly say that—LOOK OUT THERE THEY GO AGAIN!

dated, 17 January, 1955
Bellevue Hospital, N.Y.
B—"ha—ha ha ha hoo ho ho ha he".

In conclusion I would like to point out that there is a second and almost as difficult a group to work with, called the Board of Education.

This panel consists of a number of citizens who believe in an honest day's work for an honest half a dollar. Their power is supreme and their talents combine all the best features of Jack Benny and Scrooge. However, a protest against this omnipotent group is tantamount to heresy. Just go on teaching, and don't feel upset if you feel you are not as keen as you once were. To use an atrocious pun (ed. note—aren't all puns atrocious?) "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy".

A teacher eh? Well good luck! You'll need it.

Varsity Hillelites To Entertain Montrealers

A few hundred students will be converging on Montreal this weekend for their annual Hillel conference. Students from the Montreal-Toronto region of Canada and upper New York State will attend the convention, which lasts from Friday to Sunday.

"There will probably be about 100 to 200 students from Montreal and about 100 out-of-town students at the conference," said Joan Lee, a Toronto Hillelite member. "35 to 40 students are going from Toronto."

She explained that a Leadership Training Institute would be held on the Thursday and Friday mornings previous to the conference. "The main business is conducted at the Institute," she said. "The conference is more cultural and social."

The main purpose of the conference is to get people to know Hillel in other cities and to meet other Hillelites, Miss Lee reported. She said that they like to get as many students as possible to attend the conferences.

Dr. Alfred Joste will speak Friday night on "The Messianic Concept and the Mission of Israel." An inter-Hillel debate between Toronto and Queens is arranged for Saturday afternoon, as well as other cultural programmes. The rest of the time, said Miss Lee, is more for fellowship.

The hosts for this year's conference are the University of McGill, Sir George Williams College, and the MacDonald Teacher's College. Last year the conference was held in Toronto. For further information call Joan Lee, HU. 9-6484.

Contest Opens for Writers

If you are under 23, full of intellectual inspiration, and if you go to the University of Toronto, then you may—if you like—write a short story for the NFCUS Short Story Contest.

NFCUS stands for the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

The stories will be handed in here and two will be sent to Ottawa to be judged by "three prominent men of letters". First prize is publication in NEW LIBERTY at standard space rates. Second prize is 50 dollars.

The manuscript should be between 2,500 and 3,000 words, and if you like, you can hand in two or three or more at no cost. The first prize winner last year was a Toronto student at St. Michael's College.

Hand in your entry to Freddy Bull, at St. Hilda's College.

Robin Hoods Meet

The Hart House Archery Club is presenting its second open Archery School at the Drill Hall, Friday at 8:00 p.m. There are nine targets and since target allocations are made according to shooting skill and prowess no one who is just beginning will be matched against experts.

Club officials report that rewards are a-plenty: a prize for the highest score on each target, a door prize, novelty shots, and if you want to be entertained, there are always refreshments to add to the evening's entertainment. This evening is open to everybody.

Sign Up, Sing Up For HH Quartets

At least three, but preferably five more quartets are needed, Assistant to the Warden, Garth McDowell announced last night. He emphasized that trained voices and experience were not necessary to enter the contest which begins next Tuesday.

"You can lose nothing but your chords," McDowell explained, and added "All any four members of Hart House have to do is to team up, sign up, and sing up."

The entry date will be kept open until the 28th of January, in order to be able to equal the enthusiastic turnout of last year, the Quartet Committee announced.

P.C. Club Features Panel Discussion

"Peaceful Co-existence" will be the subject of a Panel Discussion in the music room at Vic Union tonight at 8:30 P.M. It will be under the sponsorship of the U. of T. Progressive Conservative Club. The members of the Panel will be Mr. Marvin Gelber, National President of the United Nations Association; Mr. James Eayrs, Professor of the Dept. of Political Science; and Lt. Col. Swinton, Past President of the U.N. Association.

John Gamble, President of the University Conservative Club, said that his Club was prompted to discuss this subject in view of the great controversy going on in the free world as to whether the free world can exist peacefully alongside the Communist world. He hopes that the topic will be discussed in a non-political atmosphere of objective rationality, and feels that it should be of interest to all thoughtful students.

Canada Not Satellite of States Mac Debaters Draw, Win Round

Toronto debaters won a draw but lost the round last night in a debate with McMaster University. The debate was one in the series of Inter-university Debating League debates sponsored by the Canadian University Debating Association.

Moishe Reiter and Clyde Batten upheld the affirmative of the motion "Resolved that Canada is a satellite of the United States", against Mac debaters Jennifer Ashmore and Ted Clarke.

While Batten accused the United States and Canada of living in a state of "peaceful co-habitation", Miss Ashmore felt that it would be more accurate to compare Canada to a stalwart young man striding purposefully along the road to self-fulfilment.

Reiter pointed out that the satellite status of Canada was so ingrained into the Canadian people that they were not even aware of their subservience. Ted Clarke felt that the debate while proceeding at a great rate of speed had not reached anything until his presentation.

Clarke referred to the Paley Report which declared that the United States would be dependent on Canada for raw materials by 1975.

Judges for the debate were Carmen Guild, graduate secretary of Hart House, Jim Vasoff, member of the Debates Commission, and Elmer Sopha.

McMaster University gained a unanimous decision over the University of Toronto team composed of Marg Riches and Peter Martin in Hamilton last Monday night. The combined votes from Monday's debate and last night's gave the decision on the round to McMaster.

McMaster will go on to debate O.A.C. in the next round. Winners of the debating series will win an expenses paid trip to Europe.

Robert Robinson

"Bob the Porter", who had served at Trinity for 28 years and was known to many thousands of graduates of that college, died earlier this week at his home. Robert George Robinson had retired five years ago after a long and well-known career as one of Trinity's most famous personages.

A faculty member at the college said that "Bob" was so well-liked and respected that no innovation was made at the college without consulting him first. Since his retirement, he has often returned to the college to attend social functions.

At Christmas, he received cards (from all over the world) from many of the students that he had known.

Dave Wood

By BOB BROWN

Dave Wood, Editor of this year's Torontonensis is a short, stocky smiling man whose cheerful attitude belies the fact that he is one of the busiest people on the campus.

Dave, a student in the third year of the General Course at Vic, was originally born in Galt, but has moved around considerably before coming to roost in Toronto. The reason why Dave has attended 10 schools in his scholastic career is that his father is a Salvation Army Officer whose job has taken him from Halifax to Peterboro.

Dave, whose home is now in Toronto, divides his activities among playing the trombone, participating in sports such as lacrosse, basketball, soccer, and tennis, attending the old lecture, and—of course—working on 'Nensis.

According to Dave, he just doesn't know how he finds time to do all of the activities that he takes part in. As well as doing all the above, he also does some quartet singing. He was elected captain of the U of T Intermediate Soccer team, and captain of the Vic Soccer squad too. And of course, he has also written articles for The Varsity.

Dave had his first contact with Torontonensis last year, when he was sports Editor. This year, he moved up to the Editorship by a unanimous vote of the Students' Administrative Council, who publish Torontonensis.

Dave spends about 20 hours a week on working on Toronto's Yearbook from about October until March. Then the going really starts to get rough, as Torontonensis reaches the finishing stages of its production. The peak of work on 'Nensis usually arrives just about the same time as the exams do, which means the Yearbook Editor is about the most harried man on the campus.

His first taste of producing a yearbook came in St. Johns, Newfoundland where he was "figure-head" editor—according to him—of his high-school book.

Dave says that despite all the work involved, he enjoys his job as Editor of the largest College Yearbook in Canada. Although he has scarcely time to think between all of his various jobs, he says that he hopes to be able to do postgrad work in Geography here, and then move on to teaching High School.

However, although he claims that he is enjoying his work, he says that he wouldn't come back to work for the yearbook again for a million dollars. But if you want to find him next year, the 'Nensis office might be a good place to look. That printer's ink gets in your blood.

So To Work

Last night's issue was decided the way most issues on this campus, in an aura of quiet self-justifying foregone conclusionism. After the heat of battle had so effectively been quenched by the action of the executive of the Skudemen, there was little left for the representatives to do but to record their votes officially.

Now that the issue of the fifty cent fee raise has been decided on this campus, NFCS as an issue will go quietly back to sleep only to be revived when some intrepid soul tries once more to examine the value of the organization, or when some thoughtless person attempts to raise the fee again.

We are sorry that in so many cases the voting of the reps. was only a mandate from the executive of their particular college and that only rarely was it an expression of the opinion of the entire membership of their college.

Now that the issue has been decided let us get on with the business of making the SAC more effective and the equally onerous task of finding sufficient money to make the decision of last night practicable.

Undoubtedly the forthcoming regional conference will view with pleasure the decision of the SAC. Let them bear in mind that this is not so much an expression of confidence in NFCS as an expression of the mutual belief in the need for some form of unifying national student organization.

They would do well to look well to their laurels and devote considerable time and energy to the implementation of programs which will capture the imagination of students on campi across Canada.

E.S.P. and You

The Editor:
The Varsity.

On our campus there is a large floating population of "Truth Seekers". Many of them lack the capacity for the strenuous intellectual effort required in a fruitful pursuit of knowledge and wisdom; others lack the power of critical evaluation, which would enable them to tell the genuine from the false.

Still others cannot be comfortable until they find a panacea to believe in. The past history of such people is usually typical. During childhood they were physically and emotionally debile, beset by compulsions and obsessions and often afflicted with enuresis till the early teens. They suffered feelings of inferiority and avoided competition. In adolescence most of them became in one way or another social outcasts and lost the little link they had with the normal population. These people support "movements" and cults.

They are as likely to "go" for spiritualism as for technocracy, for Bahaiism as for theosophy, for astrology as for Madame Zora's teacup reading programme. From the purely sociological viewpoint such cults are not wholly undesirable, because they provide harassed, despised people with some opportunity for social intercourse. They are nevertheless purely sociopathological phenomena.

It is obvious that no cult or "movement" can give a "truth-seeker" a permanent satisfaction, because what such a person really needs is serious psychiatric care. No wonder then, that new cults, pseudo-sciences and pseudophilosophies periodically crop up, enjoy some vogue and pass away into derisive oblivion.

By MIKE HARE

I was digging into our files of old Torontonensis looking for the 1938 edition the other day—and by jingo, as is so often the case, it was the sole copy missing. My interest in the 1938 volume was aroused when recently I met a graduate of 1938. The talk turned to Torontonensis and he informed me that the fee that year was $5.00. I explained to my friend how fortunate this year's grads were, for the charge is only $4.50. My friend did express a little surprise and he further claimed that it was compulsory for graduates in those days to purchase the Year Book. Oh, if such were only true today.

It was after this that I was quite anxious to view the 1938 edition, but alas it had vanished. However, there were fifty-six of its brothers standing side by side, and indeed it took a little time to recognize those beyond the year 1930. The first edition appeared in 1898. It owned a navy blue cover and the title Torontonensis '98 appeared in gold letters. The book held 240 pages

The number of pictures had sharply increased, but one notices an unfriendly stiffness that probably characterized higher levels of education in our earlier decades. Myself—I don't remember.

The slender 1918 edition greeted the reader with "We Shout and Fight, For the Blue and White," (and the University Form appeared for the first time.) 'Nensis Staff Yearbook for Everybody!

Torontonensis is the annual yearbook of the University of Toronto. It is produced for the students of all years by the Students' Administrative Council, and is the largest college annual in Canada.

Torontonensis publishes the photograph of every graduating student — over 2,000 of them — and a short biography on each one. In addition, Torontonensis makes an effort to capture on the printed page the spirit of college life at Toronto. It publishes hundreds of pictures of sports — inter-collegiate, inter-faculty, and intra-mural — and every other sort of activity that students participate in on this campus.

Torontonensis in addition contains pages where each of the many student organizations — such as college student governments, fraternities, and clubs — have pictures and articles on their activities.

This year's book will have a washable white cover — an innovation for Torontonensis. Also, the editor plans a new index where the names of all people who appear in 'Nensis pictures will be listed together with the pages on which they appear.

A particular effort is made to cover such events as college and faculty shows, and to provide complete coverage of such events as Toronto's first Winter Carnival, which was held this year.

As well as many other features, Torontonensis will publish messages from the various college and faculty heads to the graduating years. However, Torontonensis Editor Dave Wood said that Torontonensis was not just intended for students in their graduating year, but for all students. He stressed that the yearbook covered events that should be of interest to students of all years, and every college or faculty.

The price of Torontonensis is $4.50. Copies may be ordered at the roving Torontonensis stand which covers the campus, faculty by faculty. Copies may also be ordered from the faculty or college 'Nensis rep, or at any time from the SAC office in the old observatory in front of Hart House.

The Editor said that he expects that the book will be ready in time for graduation this year, as production is progressing on schedule.

an editor's musings...

A Singular Character

By DAVE WOOD
Torontonensis Editor

The writer of this article is a remarkably singular character, having the word TORONTONENSIS tattooed across his mild face. Rumor has it that twenty copies of the 1950 yearbook are being offered to any person who can identify the above and drag him into the Nensis-Office.

So you think that working on a yearbook isn't interesting? Maybe you're right; but personally we think you're crazy and we'll show you why.

What, we ask, could be more interesting than a staff bristling with . . . | what we mean is that we have lots of . . . Hold it a minute! Here's a letter in our basket, in red ink no less:

Dear Mr. Editor of the noble yearbook:

"I bet if people ask you anything you say 'It's in the book', (that's a funny, ha, ha) . . . Anyway, I count it an honour to be able to rite such an important person. (This is like when I rote like about those Porto Ricans) Well, I wanta say that I'm glad to heer about your milk-white cover cause my man used to say, 'Zed, if you wanta be healthy drink milk', and she made me take at least a pint a week. But there's one thing bothering me about this milky cover . . . We don't want it all to go to waste . . . I hope you make shur the letters are pail blue.

Zedred Bluecap

(Ed. note: Evidently Zed was cut out the Christmas before last.)

We spent most of our Christmas holidays, (with some time out for opening presents and eating) mulling over graduation photos and biographies. If you think pictures can tell a story you should read some of those self-composed biographies! A number of the young ladies are going to travel the world before they settle down and marry some Shah. And there is the ambitious and all-knowing Medsman who is planning to "mate and propagate". One of the Foresters wants to grow Christmas trees (evidently a budding Santa), and also such a thing as a file-o-phil, the reason being we have a pretty Nurse on our staff who shuts herself away with her file to compile the names from all the pictures which come in. This service of self-sacrifice means that if you want to check up on all cousin George's activities you just glance at the individual index at the back of the book. (Oh joy!)

... Somebody breezes in. "How's the milky cover coming, Whitey?" "Still in the grass-roots stage, Mush, but coming."

He is gone again. So you think that working on the yearbook isn't interesting? We were going to prove you crazy; perhaps we proved ourselves to be that, but it's fun; it's fun, fun, fun, fun, fun fun. . .

Producing a yearbook for a University the size of Toronto is a large and complicated business. Here are a few facts and figures on Torontonensis Production.

- total staff, almost all voluntary and unpaid — 20 workers and roughly 50 representatives for biography cards.
- total cost is $12,000 (Dave Wood, the Editor, hopes that this year's book will break "even through sales of books and advertising).
- total man-hours required in its production—immeasurable.
- cost to the student: $4.50 a copy.
- total copies produced: 1,600 (which does not compare favourably with other universities — for instance, McGill with about 5,000 students, sells 2,600 copies of the yearbook).
- total number of engravings — (all copper half-tones) about 1,000.
- total number of pages: 475.

The student when purchasing the volume often does not realize the vast amount of effort on such jobs as copy-reading, page lay-out, dummy paste-up, and a million and one other jobs that have to be done.

However, Dave Wood, the Editor, expressed confidence in his staff to cope with all problems that might arise.

Dave Wood also says that he expects that the book will be ready by Graduation, and it can either be mailed or picked up by the student.

CAGEMEN SWAMP MARAUDERS 78-56

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN VOJTECH

There once was a day when a person could wander into an ice arena and confidently watch a group of men playing hockey. Not so any more. The other day we wandered into Varsity Arena to get warm. You can imagine the initial shock the sight of women playing hockey, had on us. At first, we couldn't believe what we were seeing and calmly passed it off as the results of the pickle pie we ate the night before. We closed our eyes hoping that the little gremlins would disappear. We opened our eyes just in time to see a girl do a figure-eight as she went in to score.

We cornered one of the coaches, Paul Quilty, by name and asked him to fill us in on the details. He said it was quite simple. The girls thought the game would be enhanced if femininity were introduced. So they modified the rules. They tossed out the center red line; disallowed body checking, tearing hair, scratching eyes and wearing the same kind of hair-dos. The games are played three periods of ten minutes each. The girls, he said, were enjoying themselves immensely as they imitated their male counterparts.

Having this brief fill-in on the rules we sat down and watched the game (?). The game started out as any red-blooded Canadian boy might think it would start. The girls faced off. One wandered around trying to figure out where her position was. She had received her instructions from her coach on a blackboard. She was convinced that the other team was hiding that little 'x' which was supposed to be her place on the ice. Other girls decided that there were too many girls in their team and so they decided to face off on the same side as their opponents. This, of course, harassed the referee who was taking all this in gleefully. Finally after brief instructions from the onlooking crowd both teams got set for the face off.

Then it happened. A girl put out her stick and tripped her opponent. The girl was simply horrified. She immediately began to spout words of sorrow and apology. This intense demonstration of sorrow, however, didn't keep her from getting a penalty. In fact, she even went over and helped her opponent up. Even this didn't deter the staid referee.

Then, of course, we have the girl who has seen hockey played but has never played before. She has one idea that is to get the puck into the net. So she calmly stands chatting with the opposing goal tender until her team mates bring the puck up to her. Then she makes a great effort to shove the puck into the net. The goal tenders frustrate her attempts by lying prostrate between the goal posts. You see, most girls can't lift the puck. But then there are exceptions and they are far and few between.

There is also the girl who knows how to figure skate. So she wears figure skates. She spies the puck getting away from one of her teammates and she immediately tears after the loose disc. Did we say tear after the puck? She literally ran after the puck. Ah, those grooves on figure skates do come in useful now and then.

This article isn't meant to put the girls to ridicule because at times their playing is quite good. It's really amazing to see a girl break in all alone on a goalie, do a quick figure eight, and put the biscuit in the basket. Then for an encore she will do a fancy hop, step and jump. All in all, for an amusing hour, you should get out and watch these girl hockey games. They're more interesting than watching the 'Comedy Hour' on TV. So, here's to you, girls. Keep it up and the males will come down to pick up some pointers from you.

Mac Downed By Intermed Blues

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Jumping John Daceyshyn proved to be a one man team last night as he led the Varsity Intermediates to a comparatively easy, 74-43, basketball victory over the McMaster Buccaneers. His team having built up a 38-13 lead, Johnny McManus interchanged his players so successfully that, even when the second stringers were playing, the Buccaneers could not capitalize.

Scoring eleven of his 21 points within the first eight minutes of play Daceyshyn with his jumping set was completely conspicuous as the outstanding player on the court. His rebound work left little to be desired, also, as he continued, as in last game, to out-jump the Macmen even when two or three attempted to box him out.

McMaster, whose main difficulty was their inability to co-ordinate as a unit, were particularly unable to play good ball because of their poor passing. On some occasions the men to whom the ball was being thrown were not even looking.

So ineffective was the Buccaneer attack that even when the Baby Blues fielded a complete second string team for most of the second half the Macmen were outscored 23-13. The only man of the McMaster squad showing any initiative was diminutive Bill Muir whose work around the key enabled him not only to score but to draw Varsity fouls. He was Mac's top scorer with twelve.

One of the most pleasing aspects of the game occurred in the second half when Ed Rigby started to hit from around the key as he combined good form and accuracy with a jumping one-hand set shot to score eleven points. Displeasing, however, was Rigby's bad habit of dribbling into the corner and behind the basket with the result that he was trapped almost every time.

After the Baby Blues had accumulated a considerable number of points they started to play one of the helter-skelter type of ball games so typical of them in recent games. Although the guards worked a weave there was rarely any indication of any play-making on their part. The exception was Jerry Wojdon who, although he scored eight points, was setting up plays whenever possible.

Harold Rotman, also, was playing well for the Baby Blues. With thirteen points Rotman scored some picturesque shots. His work defensively, such as boxing out and rebounding was good to watch.

Blues' League Record Still Intact Fawcett, Vaichulis Hoop Thirteen

By MOISHE REITER

Maintaining their perfect record for league play this season, the Varsity Blues defeated the McMaster Marauders 78-56 in Hart House last night. The game, played in the spirit of intense rivalry that has become standard between Varsity and Mac, was slightly rough, with 33 fouls being called against the two clubs, one a technical for surliness. Victory last night brought the Blues into a first place tie with the Western Mustangs.

Scoring power appeared in spasmic bursts for both teams with the competition almost even until big Alf Vaichulis began hitting on a variety of shots that had the Macmen totally amazed. Vaichulis' spurt was the high point in a Blue comeback drive that started after five minutes of play had passed and the Marauders had worked up a 13-5 lead.

Main Blue trouble at the start was the fact that they were unable to score well from the outside. This part of the Varsity offense has consistently been one of the strongest, with such long-shot artists as Leo Madden and Peter Potter throwing with an easy accuracy - but not at the beginning of last night's match.

Mac had their troubles as well as those opening minutes with star player, and the night's high scorer, Jim Shepard, having 3 fouls called against him after less than ten minutes of play. Shepard later added to his total with a technical foul called for excessive talking. The big Marauder star found time in between handing out free throws to the Blues, to hoop a neat 14 points, one better than either Don Fawcett or Alf Vaichulis, the Blues' top men scored.

Starting to score on sharp shooting from in around the hoop, early in the second period, the Blues pulled ahead on a Vaichulis drive, the big man hooking one, jumping for another and laying up a third. In the meanwhile George Stulac was rebounding in his usual effective form and the guards were working the ball in outstanding displays of team-play.

Blue scoring was far better distributed than that of Mac. Big Jim Shepard's 14 was high for the night, true, but he and Max Woolley were the only Macmen to hit ten or better, while four Blues, Fawcett and Vaichulis with 13, Pete Potter with 11 and Marv Tile with 10 stood out for the Varsity.

Puckmen to Meet Carabins In Tomorrow Night's Game

Varsity's hockey Blues take to the ice in Varsity Arena tomorrow night in what is sure to be a renewal of the knock 'em down drag 'em out battle that took place last Saturday night in Verdun. The Blues came out of that game with a 1-1 draw, after two periods of overtime, as well as about a dozen and a half well-frayed tempers.

The Carabins, who dumped the cellar-dwelling Red and Gold of Laval University 4-2 in Verdun Tuesday night, will be out to increase their one-point lead over the McGill Redmen in the league standings. Montreal slipped into second place past the Tribe by virtue of the Tuesday victory.

The Blues will be at full strength for the encounter, going with the same team that played Laval two weeks ago here. News from the Blue camp shows that Sam Ashton, bruising defence-man with the Blues last season, who was injured in a pre-season exhibition game, will be out for the rest of the schedule. However, with the way the defence has shown so far there shouldn't be much opportunity for the Carabin snipers tomorrow night.

Netminder Hugh Curry turned in one of his best performances to date in last week's double-header, allowing three goals in three games and some sixty shots. With the Blues out to return some of the medicine the Carabins were handing out in Verdun last weekend, it's likely that a high-scoring rough contest will be the result. Game time will be 8:00 with the usual top-notch brand of hockey entertainment displayed to us students for the usual price of admission - your ATL card.

A women's athletic building is not just talk. No longer is a female Hart House a dream. President Smith's report made our longed for building an actuality by stating in black and white that in the year 1955 work is to start on an addition to Falconer Hall. This is the best news that we have heard in a long time.

The facilities which Varsity has to offer its female students are a disgrace to a university the size of Toronto. The local Toronto high schools have far superior facilities for their students. How can there be a decent athletic programme for the women if we can't even supply them with a proper gym or pool?

Visiting universities, coming to Toronto for intercollegiate competition must be really impressed with the building which we have for women's activities - 415 Yonge Street, Y.W., O.C.E., Drill Hall and Lillian Massey. Sure, the list sounds long and impressive, but have you ever examined the component parts?

What we have is a scattered conglomeration of buildings situated anywhere between Spadina and Yonge. To top it all off, most of the buildings are not ours alone. Try to co-ordinate an efficient athletic program out of this mess, plus the fact that the floor space is not enough to accommodate the enrolment. If it wasn't for the genius of the Athletic Directorate and especially that of Miss Slack, I do not know where we would be.

Who would want to train, or for that matter just pleasure swim in a pool like L.M.? Ever try swimming in a bathtub? I assure you, it is no fun. Granted, that you will get a lot of practice in those racing turns between those four strokes that take you from one end of the pool to the other, but again who wants that?

As for diving in this Roman bath, that is a lost cause; however, if you have an extra street car ticket you can hop a red rocket to the Y.W. For tennis and most of the regular PHE skills, the locale is off the campus again - this time try 415 Yonge. As if you haven't enough to do, without running all over creation for your athletic interests.

The new women's building is a must. With the increasing enrolment coming in a few years the situation will be critical. As it is now, Toronto has to cut and limit many of its athletic activities because of the limited space. What would happen in a few years with more students within these confines is anyone's guess.

The new building will end all our difficulties as it will provide the equipment and space that are now lacking. The proposed building which will be erected back of Falconer Hall, taking in the President's garden and the coach house, will be the envy of all, including the males.

Plus space for lecture rooms and dressing rooms, there will be a pool 75 by 42 (wider and deeper than Hart House). As for gyms, they will make any mouth water - one is 120 by 100, which means five badminton courts, three volleyball courts and two basketball floors with the other gym being 100 by 75.

With this building, there will be no stopping the females of this university in athletic endeavours.

Court Comments

By BILL CORCORAN

Last Saturday night before the smallest A-night crowd in years, the Blues lived up to all pre-season notices. After an abject first half, the Blues started Madden, Potter, Fawcett, Stulac and Binnington to try to get things going-get things going they did! Before the Blue Devils had time to check their watches, their seemingly insurmountable lead of 14 points had dwindled to three.

Then the battle began. The action was terrific. Madden hit, then Fawcett, then Stulac-Blues ahead by two-even-Blues down by one-crowd going crazy. Wilks replaces Tomich in the Lawrence lineup and throws a set. Fawcett back for the Blues with a jump from the side-Drurus gets two uncheckables. Johnson running miles for the visitors and setting up play after play but the big boy under the hoop is coasting. Blue rebounding lead by Stulac and Binnington (he of the bad back) controlling the boards-Madden on a one-hander gets lead back for the Blues-Vaichulis in for Binnington-lead increased to three — Stulac on a hook and the game ends with Blues ahead by five.

The last half was the best brand of basketball a Varsity club has played in many a moon. Stulac with 21, Madden 17, and Potter and Fawcett each with 13, lead the Blue scoring. Mattsalla got two baskets on three shots in the short time he was on the floor.

Hope Shots . . . Blues beat McMaster 78-56 in a slow game last night. This is a lean year talent-wise for the Hamilton club as Violin, Stanley, and Wrigglesworth all graduated last year.

In games last week the Assumption Purple Raiders dropped two to Queens and McGill. Triano, the talented but temperamental border city boy was not in the lineup but even his absence does not explain the two stunning upsets. The only available explanation is that the boys from the Detroit suburb played with one hand strapped to their side.

Up at Western big Ray Monnot, former Tri-Bell and Varsity star, sits on the bench as rumors of dissension creep out of the golf course campus. These troubles, if true, will probably be settled by the time the Horsies meet the Blues up in Mustangtown on February 12. That game could well decide the title.

This Saturday the University of Buffalo, led by Horne, the all-time scoring king of that school, visit Hart House. This is probably the classiest aggregation the fans will see on the Blues' home half-court. Don't miss it.

Doctors Victors St. Mike's Lose

In a very exciting and highly amusing contest at Varsity Stadium yesterday noon, Meds' girls downed St. Mike's by a score of 3-2.

The first period was marked by fast skating on both sides but few shots on goal, as there was a quantity of off sides called, on both teams. Their knowledge of the rules seemed a little hazy. The line of Gratton, Gratton and Trickey added considerable colour, as well as speed.

Meds' started fast in the second period putting the pressure on Dillon of S.M.C., and a few seconds later, Marjorie Platts made it 1-0 for the Doctors. The Mike women in turn put on the pressure, but couldn't put it past the Meds' goalie, and the period ended 1-0.

In the last period, the only penalty of the game went to Carm De Carlo of S.M.C. for accidentally tripping one of her opponents. A few minutes after, Ruth Trickey went in alone, and put one past the Meds' goalie to tie the game. But it was not to be for Platts went right back up the ice and made it 2-1 for the doctors. And thus the game ended, in spite of the last minute rush of the Mike women.

Credit must be given to both goalies for their efforts, and to the defense work of Peg Cain of St. Mike's, and Pat Scully, of Meds.

Employment Tight — Placement Director But Situation Only "Return To Normal"

A general tightening of the employment situation was described by the Director of the University Placement Service, Mr. J. K. Bradford, in his annual report to the President. Mr. Bradford said that the accent on employing members of the graduating class had changed from "an open invitation on the part of all employers to members of the graduating class, to an attitude of selective caution."

The Director also said that the retrenchment in employment was most noticeable in summer employment. He said that many employers could find a sufficient labor pool among their own former employees and did not need to use university students. He suggested as a remedy that grants should be made available to students in lieu of summer employment.

Mr. Bradford said that, several of the larger Canadian Companies did not apply for any university graduates this year, and that other companies would only employ graduates who could meet their specifications exactly. An increase in former grads seeking employment through the service was also noticed.

However, said Mr. Bradford, the conditions now prevailing are merely a "return to normal" in the employment situation.

IRC Club To Hear Secretary's Speech On Afro-Asia Talk

The National Secretary of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, Brigham Day, will speak on "Prospects of the Afro-Asian Conference", today at 4:10 p.m. in the Music Room of the Vic Union. It will be the first meeting of the International Relations Club of this term.

A graduate in Economics of Bishop's University, Mr. Day got his M.A. at the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Paris. He received his doctorate in the Law Faculty, at the University of Paris.

He has been to conferences in Oxford, the Sorbonne, Madrid, Geneva and the Hague. Besides being secretary of the C.I.A., Mr. Day is an occasional commentator on the national and overseas network of the CBC.

The current fad among the frustrated ones of our campus is to become extra-sensory-perceptionists. They follow their "apostle," an obscure teacher of an obscure Southern College, who claims to have performed a number of doubtfully successful "experiments" in such "fields" as telepathy, psychokinesis, prophecy, and other similar old wives' tales scientifically re-named.

The results obviously did not convince any one with a spark of wit in his head, the more so, that, when the items used were mixed with a mechanical device by scientists, the psychokinetists and prophets were no better at guessing than the theory of probability would indicate. It is certain that one cannot reason with the extra-sensory-perceptionists anymore than with the Bedlam Napoleons. Unlike the Bedlam Napoleons however, they have to be thankful for providing a nice topic for discussion.

Men of SMC to Pay More for Activities Dollar Raise in Council Fee Passed

Sheepskins Given At Varsity in '54 At 2000 Mark

A total of 2,556 people were granted degrees and certificates from the University of Toronto last year, it was revealed in the President's Report.

A total of 2,346 degrees (consisting of 1,754 men and 592 women) were granted by the University. Toronto also awarded 210 certificates or diplomas last year.

Of the degrees granted by the University, the well known BA was the most common, with 435 men and 347 women receiving this.

Next in order of size were the number of degrees awarded to those graduating in Medicine.

A total of 168 MD's were given out, along with 3 B.Sc. (Med.). Also, 22 members of the class of Medicine in 1904 received MD degrees who had not previously had them.

Also given out were 143 MA's, 74 Ph.D.'s, and 296 B.A.Sc.'s.

Some 350 men students at St. Michael's College will likely pay an additional dollar-a-year next fall for student activities, it was learned last night.

A motion to boost the compulsory students' activities' fee from $10-11-per-student came at a meeting of St. Mike's SAC Wednesday. The co-ed fee has so far not been raised from $10.

There was no indication that officials of either the College or the University would interfere.

The motion has been pending since the beginning of the year, and will place an additional $350.00 at the disposal of the SAC next year. The proposal had been tabled for this length in order to give the members of the council a chance to sound out student opinion on the matter, and to investigate other possibilities of financial alleviation.

Bourke Smith, Vice-President and Chairman of the Council, explained that under the previous conditions the Council could not take on any new projects, or carry out the desired program of expansion of activities. The position of the Council was not a new one, and according to Smith it has hampered previous SAC's in fulfilling some of the responsibilities of student government — such as supplying adequate athletic equipment.

"The SAC of St. Michael's not only has a right to regulate activities on a greater scale if such a demand exists," said Chairman Smith, "but it has an obligation to do so."

The motion which was approved on Wednesday, known as the Driscoll Amendment, provides:

(1) That the society fees of the Arts Students shall be increased from ten dollars per academic year to eleven dollars.

(2) That the society fee of the Professional Students shall be increased from five dollars per academic year to five dollars and fifty cents.

(3) That this motion be applied on a trial basis for one year commencing Sept. 1955 to May 1956, to be voted again in the month of April 1956 to determine whether this aforesaid motion shall become permanent or be voted out.

(4) That the purpose of this motion shall be for a major project . . . of the residing council of the time.

The motion will apply only to the men of St. Michael's. A proposed Constitution is pending, which if adopted will unite the men's and women's councils of the college into a single body. The effect of such a move on the present amendment has not been disclosed.

The faculty of the college had no comment to make on the new amendment to the constitution of the Students' Council.

Social Workers to Re-examine Goals In Lecture Series

On February 7, the University of Toronto School of Social Work will present the first in a series of ten Monday evening lectures entitled MINDS ON THE MOVE.

Professor Charles E. Hendry, Director of the School of Social Work, has described the series as "an attempt to involve scholars on this campus and from elsewhere in a re-examination of our goals."

"There is nothing very world-shaking or dramatic about this effort," Dr. Hendry said, "except the fact that it is being done at all."

Science is strictly neutral. Scientists must, therefore, turn to the humanities in their search for values.

It is for this reason that the present lecture series is being offered this year. Interested laymen as well as professional leaders who wish to re-examine "The Sources of Values in the Helping Professions" will find these lectures stimulating.

All lectures will be held in room 153, the Economics Building, 273 Bloor Street West, at 7:30 p.m. Applications with fees should be submitted in advance of the course. The fee for the series is ten dollars.

Plans for Slashing Students' Costs On Tap at Ontario NFCUS Regional Spade work in a proposed plan to get cuts in books — and many other commodities used by University students — will likely be started this week-end at an Ontario regional conference here of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, it was said last night.

Gordon Hurlburt, head of the University of Toronto NFCUS committee, said that the plan would be the key project for discussion when some 25-30 delegates from half-a-dozen colleges throughout the province meet here Saturday and Sunday.

NFCUS representatives from Carleton College, Queen's University, the U of T, the University of Western Ontario, Assumption College and Waterloo College will be here, Hurlburt said.

The plan, as outlined by Hurlburt in an article in The Varsity, a week ago goes under the initials "SDS" — students' discount service.

If the plan could be worked out, Hurlburt said, it would mean that students could pick up text books at certain bookstores at a reduced rate.

"The NFCUS committee on each campus," Hurlburt said, "will line up merchants willing to give discounts to students and then will print and distribute discount cards."

Hurlburt said that the advantage of the system is that the cards could be used nationally, hence could be used by a student at any university centre in the Dominion.

The two-day conference will swing into activity at 9 a.m., in the debates room of Hart House, here. Douglas Burns, National President of NFCUS and Bill Angus, President of the Students'

Administrative Council, here, are slated to give opening addresses.

The delegates will break off at noon, returning to the convention-room again at 1:30 p.m. until 5:30 p.m. An evening session may also be held, according to Hurlburt.

On Sunday, the meeting will swing into action at 10 a.m., breaking up again at 12:30. Informal talks will fill out the remainder of the afternoon until 4 o'clock train time.

Besides local committee reports, the delegates hear:

1) A discussion on a proposed NFCUS magazine to be published by Carleton College later in the year.

2) A discussion on possible exemption from income tax responsibility by university students — a matter being handled by Queen's delegates.

3) Proposals on art and scholarships by Toronto delegates.

4) Discussion of photo contest rules by McMaster representatives.

5) Talk about International Affairs by Western delegates.

6) Discussion of next year's NFCUS projects.

canadian gift to colombo plan scored at varsity conservative club meeting

Canada's $26,000,000 contribution to the Colombo plan is not enough, Mr. James Eayrs of the Department of Political Economy said at last night's panel discussion on peaceful co-existence at the Varsity Conservative Club.

He described such economic schemes as complementary to military alliances such as SEATO and NATO. Both were vital to the policy of meeting strength with strength which he supported in dealing with the Communist world. He did not subscribe to the alternative views that a lasting peace could be established because of a supposed change of attitude in Russia since the death of Stalin or to the idea that the best for which we might hope is a breathing space between two outright wars. Mr. Eayrs also noted that Malenkov has a very different idea of peaceful co-existence than we have.

Lt.-Col. Swinton, past president of the United Nations Association, second member of the panel, remarked that the former view of war as a continuation of peace by using different means had recently been reversed so that peace is now a continuation of war using different means.

German rearmament is a cardinal point of policy for both sides. It is not only of military but also of political and perhaps sociological significance since a strong nation in the centre of activities, unarmed is in an artificial vacuum. If Germany is incorporated as the Paris agreements stand, it will check Russian expansion. "We must have a position of strength from which to negotiate" Commenting on the plea for more negotiations he said, "We must not first try once more but rather must be strong first."

Mr. Marvin Gelber, president of the United Nations Association, third member of the panel, stated that "Asian problems are harder to define because European issues are more clearly cut between the major power blocs." This was partly because the rise of Asian nationalism (encouraged by the Japanese) and social expectancy (their refusal to accept their misery any further) were simply Communist ideas. "The Communists' victory was as much a tribute to their organizational ability to exploit poor conditions as a commentary on the collapse of the old regime."

Noting that the NATO type alliance is unpopular in parts of Asia he asked if we could have a policy of a hard and fast line as we do in Europe. The disagreement in Europe over such a system for Europe was not a refusal of such but merely a disagreement as to how it should be instituted. We have a better chance of the sympathy and support of Asia by supporting policies which are popular there such as the Colombo Plan, the World Health Organization and the United Nations' Children's Fund, rather than weakly supported set-ups such as SEATO which "is really an agreement without teeth."

Mr. Eayrs stated that neither Eisenhower nor Sen. Knowland supported the idea of preventive war. Mr. Gelber upheld that Asians were afraid that the present policy would turn out to be global. Mr. Eayrs said that there is no reason to believe that Formosa is Mao Tse-tung's last ambition and that the present situation may shake some of our misconceptions regarding Chiang Kai-Shek's regime and its power against the mainland.

Peter Martin

By AL TOUGH

Peter Martin, III UC believes that; "It's better to get on the inside of an organization and work, rather than stand on the outside and criticize". He seems to apply this well to his own life, as he is NFCUS vice-president of Ontario, UC's EAC rep, NFCUS chairman of the EAC and a member of the WUS administrative committee. He is also secretary of the residence council, president of his own house, and assistant treasurer of his fraternity, Kappa Alpha.

Besides holding these executive positions, Peter Martin has played intramural volleyball, and basketball for UC. He won second prize in the Epstein Short Story contest, and has debated in UC and at the intercollegiate level, including a debate against McMaster on Monday of this week.

One of the most exciting incidents in Martin's past was his arrest in Europe during the summer of 1950, for the murder of Sir Jack Drummond, his wife and his daughter. This was a brutal sex-slashing near the border of France and Switzerland. After the police spent two weeks finding him, he was held about half a day before his complete innocence was established.

Martin was in Europe at this time on a U.N. scholarship to the World Youth Forum. He won this two month scholarship to Great Britain during his high school days at Trinity College School in Port Hope. He had entered T.C.S. on another $2,000 scholar-lot by installing cigarette and coke vending machines in the smoking room of the Library.

— applauded the announcement that it is the financial duty of the University to find money with which to support 11 o'clock closing of the Library, the centre of the University; and that the principal object of the University was to study and learn, for "a healthy mind and a healthy body cannot be achieved merely by sending the student home to bed early."

— passed a motion to refer a request to assist in the matter of the Winter Carnival's deficit to the Finance Commission.

— adjourned to taste applejack.

ship "which sounds big, but remember it costs $1000 a year to go there." At T.C.S. he played various sports, including football on the Little Big Four championship team in 1950. Martin said; "Sports are only relaxation or an unnecessary evil", and added "I think sports are overemphasized at U of T."

After a year at Carleton College in Ottawa, his home, he entered Philosophy and English at UC. He said; "I'm in Philosophy because I feel that philosophers are the only people at university who get an education. In other subjects you are just trained; in Philosophy you learn to think". His course may lead to civil service, perhaps external affairs.

On the current controversy on NFCUS, Martin stated emphatically: "It's my personal opinion that U of T as a whole would suffer an enormous loss of prestige if it dropped out of NFCUS. It would indicate we are foolish, selfish, bigotted, parochial, narrow-minded, and suffering from Hog-Town-ism!"

...I'd Go Too!

All packed up and nowhere to go you think, well, think again! We're headed for a warmer climate. This zero weather is too much for us. You stay here and shiver, or perhaps you'd like to join us? Florida is a nice place to be in weather like this! And we're all dressed for it already.

Help!!

Aiuti, Dove il Cano!

By BILL SMYTH

Let's suppose, for the sake of argument, that you find yourself in Rome. Go ahead — stretch that thing you call your imagination. Let's suppose further, that your knowledge of Italian is limited. Quite. As it is with most of us.

Well then, you fool, how are you going to find all the things you have wanted to see? Which bus — or subway, if they have them there — are you going to take? And how are you going to manage all those mundane affairs — such as money, passports, meals, sleeping, without being clipped?

Obviously you need a guide. And this guide can be procured most inexpensively with the NFCUS tours and sailings. Somewhere between one and three hundred dollars more cheaply.

Now most people when they go to some place far away feel that they don't want to be saddled with a chaperon. But this guide won't hurt you; he won't try to regulate your morals; he won't keep you from drinking yourself into oblivion on champagne; he won't try to take that beautiful thing you met in Venice away from you. He'll just tell you how to do things the most sensible way, where to go, and so on.

And if you are like most University students, it's about time you became sensible.

Be truthful: wouldn't you like to go to Europe? Then go by NFCUS' plan. Even if you are going to be stubborn, and not go on a tour, you can go happily across the great ocean on special sailings arranged by NFCUS.

Which also cost less.

And you'll have some other students to gossip with on the way over. Students from other Canadian universities. It appears that — just incidentally, mind you — you might find out something about your own country.

And 'tis about time.

If you find yourself at all interested, just trot around to the SAC office, and pick up the prettily coloured reading material they have there. Orange, yellow, pink, and green.

You might take a lot and paper the walls of your room with it.

Excerpts From Mikado Featured by Vic Club

The Victoria College Music Club presented the fifth in a series of noon-hour concerts on Tuesday. The principals from the Music Club's forthcoming production, THE MIKADO, sang excerpts from the show.

These concerts are presented every second Tuesday for the purpose of giving talented students a chance to perform.

The Music Club also holds record hours on alternate Tuesdays and sponsors a small vocal group. This group, under the direction of Bill Metcalfe, is primarily interested in the singing of motets and madrigals.

Japan, West Indies, Africa, For WUS Summer Program

The World University Service seminar will be held in Japan this year, announced Graeme Ferguson, executive co-secretary of WUS in Canada. He said that the WUS summer program would have three branches: Japan, West Africa, and the West Indies.

Twenty-eight Canadian students will be chosen for the entire WUS summer program, he said. Three of these students will come from the University of Toronto, two from McGill, Laval, and UBC, and one from each of the other universities.

Applications for the WUS program are to be in by February 25. The selections, which will be made by the selection committee in each university, will be announced in March. He said that students, when making their applications, should indicate whether they preferred to attend the seminar in Japan or the study tours of West Africa or the West Indies.

The Japan trip will cost each participant a minimum of $300.00, including incidentals, Ferguson declared. The seminar will have about 70 to 80 people from North America, Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and Asia. Among them there will be 20 Canadians and 20 Japanese. The directors will be Dr. Odza, the Dean of Law at Tokyo University, and Father Levesque, the Dean of the Faculty of Social Science at Laval.

The Japanese seminar will begin with orientation at a Buddhist monastery, Koya-san, near Osaka, said Ferguson. Then the group will split up into smaller ones, of an international character, for study tours of the various parts of Japan. These, about a week in length, will be followed by work camps. Then the whole group will meet for about three weeks in August, near Tokyo, for the seminar.

"The Responsibility of Higher Education" is the theme of the seminar for this year. It will be followed by free time, and a visit to Japanese universities for about a week or ten days. The Japanese school year begins before the Canadian one does. The group will arrive back in Canada about September 20.

Both the West Indies and the West Africa trips are study tours. The West African tour will have four Canadian students, one European student, and a Canadian leader. This group will attend a summer school in the University College of Nigeria in Ibadan. The theme of this will be "West African Background". The tour will visit Nigeria, the Gold Coast, French West Africa, and, if possible, Liberia. The tour will be similar to last year's, Mr. Ferguson said.

The tour to the West Indies will have four Canadian students and a Canadian leader. The theme of the summer school (held in the University College of the West Indies in Kingston, Jamaica) will be "The Emerging Caribbean". Cuba, Haiti, Jamaica, Trinidad, and other countries will be visited.

On both the West Africa and the West Indian tours, the time will be divided, with five weeks of touring, two weeks of free time, and two weeks of summer school.

Asia-African Conference Discussed at IRC Meet

"Future Historians will regard the past Geneva Conference as the initial turning point toward world government" said Brigham Day on the topic: "Prospects of the Afro-Asian Conference" today.

He said, in his speech to the International Relations Club, that a complete re-examination is necessary for the policy of Western diplomacy. Recent international political strategy has shown an unfortunate time lag in accepting new realities, he added.

Mr. Day, Secretary of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, said that the Asian nations are likely to insist on a more realistic acceptance by the West, or else they will go into Russian camps. All the colored peoples of the world were represented at this conference, and collectively they represent a great potential force.

The Afro-Asian conference is likely to demand recognition on an equal basis with the West, and increased economic aid with no riders attached, he said. He concluded that some form of world government or co-operation is necessary to co-ordinate the fact that the world is becoming, economically and socially, a universal entity.

Mr. Day is a graduate in Economics at Bishops University in Liverpool, England. He received his M.A. at the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Paris and his doctorate at the Law Faculty at the University of Paris.

'Kisses' Shocking Say Br. Scientists — But Lots of Fun

Osculation — which is the technical term for kissing — came in for some unromantic criticism recently from some British scientists. They stated that their researches led them to believe that about one person in 20 produces a blue electric spark when kissing.

The National Physical Research Laboratory said that the friction caused when two people (presumably of the opposite sex) with dry lips kiss could result in a blue spark.

The spokesman said "Combing dry hair can produce 300 volts. A reasonable estimate for a kiss may be 500 volts."

The spokesman added that affectionate couples need fear no ill-results. "There would be no energy — well, no electric energy — behind the kiss", he explained.

Just Demands

In the open letter appearing on this page the SAC has raised some considerations concerning the operation of the library which deserve not only discussion but action.

It is appalling that so many services of the university do not seem to be operated with the benefit of the student in mind. The library is certainly in this category.

There can be no doubt that in the system of education employed here, the library plays a crucial role. To deny the students the effective use of that institution, particularly in view of the inconvenience occasioned by the expansion, is to thwart any serious attempt to educate the undergraduates.

Students have a right to expect that the library will be a useful part of the university's provision for their education. The demands of the students through their Administrative Council are not excessive, and we believe they are just.

Skule Ties

Recently, heroic attempts have been made to instill into the undergraduates of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, a feeling of professionalism.

Edicts have been issued prohibiting the use of striped engineers' caps in freshman orientation, and the sale of these distinctive blue and yellow jackets. It has been suggested that future engineering freshmen might more suitably decorate themselves with green ties.

While we commend the attempt of the engineering executive to foster maturity of thought among potential professional engineers, we question their methods of operating.

You cannot make a person mature by putting a green tie around his neck. You do not make a person responsible by dressing him in a tie, collar and jacket. Neither do you make a person a rebel or rattle-rouser by dressing him in a striped cap and blue jacket.

As Plato observed, the question of propriety of dress can only be resolved by improving the whole outlook of the individual. It can never be adequately solved by superimposed arbitrary standards.

Self-determination

After the remarks of the president in his annual report concerning the autonomy of student government, it is heartening to see that at least one college government retains some semblance of self-determination.

The action of St. Michael's SAC in raising their fee, and having it become effective without faculty or administration voicing approval or otherwise, should serve as an example to other student governments of the campus including the Students' Administrative Council of the University.

If the students through their elected government decide that their fees should be raised, there can be no moral justification for the action of any administrative body which will refuse or reject that decision.

While we recognize the legal right of the Board of Governors to decide as they did formerly in connection with the proposed fee raise, we question the wisdom of that action.

We believe that it constitutes an abrogation of the principle of self government.

Open Letter From SAC

As a result of the motion passed at this week's SAC meeting, the following letter has been written by an SAC representative.

Motion:— resolved that the SAC print an open letter in the Varsity concerning the library situation.

At last — good library facilities after much delay and inconvenience! Yes, the University of Toronto students are proud and grateful, for theirs is a beautiful new building, containing well-lit rooms and spacious stacks where comfortable carrels greatly facilitate study. Alas! These benefits are rendered practically inaccessible or, at least, far less valuable than they should be, all because reasonable service is not provided.

In a recent letter, the Chief Librarian promised us a return to "the good old days" of 10 p.m. closings. This, we realize, is an improvement on present conditions but we do not yet have the "equivalent service" promised in Mr. Blackburn's letter, for instead of opening at 8.45 a.m., the Library does not open until 9 a.m. Students coming from distant places on the campus such as St. Mike's, Victoria, Flavelle House, and the Ec. Building, cannot possibly (except for the sprinters) renew books and get to lectures on time at 9 o'clock.

The present 9 p.m. closing does not mean that we can study until 9. At 8.30 a nerve shattering buzzer begins its clamour, to be followed by an energetic little man bent on driving us as fast as possible from the learned premises. A 10 o'clock closing undoubtedly means that buzzer and janitor could commence their operations at 9.30, an hour far too early, for most students have just successfully begun their work by that time.

We feel, therefore that it is entirely reasonable that the library should remain open until 11.00 p.m. Residence students, in their petition, have already pointed out the desirability of this. Now, on behalf of all students of the U. of T., the SAC requests that at least one room in the building remain open until 11 p.m. every week night.

We appreciate that keeping the Library open an extra hour costs money. However, we feel that the university should consider Library service first, and find the necessary money, even at the expense of other activities. We also wonder how many students realize that they pay a compulsory fee of $5.00 to the Library. Is the Library, or such institutions as the Arbor Room and student Unions (which stay open until 11 p.m.), the centre of University life?

Surely the University should want to keep its library open as long as possible — that is, if it still maintains that its principal objectives are study and learning.

"The healthy mind in the healthy body" cannot be achieved merely by sending the students home to bed early. S.A.C.

Almost 3 Million For U. of T. From Various Donors Last Year

A total of $2,656,642.77 was given by various donors to the University last year, President Smith revealed in his report. The list of donations fills over five pages of fine print in the report.

The largest single amount collected was $1,039,914.45 which was from the "Varsity Appeal", launched a few years ago. Other large donations included $326,699.73 from the National Research Council, $272,893.72 from the Defence Research Board, $101,808.61 from the Rockefeller Foundation, and $79,272.00 from the Research Council of Ontario. These grants were mostly made for specific research projects.

About $100,000 was given to the U. of T. by various donors for the purpose of cancer research.

The largest private donation was that of the estate of the late Thomas A. Russell, which contributed almost $40,000 to UC.

our readers write: Backfiring Illusory Illegitimacy

The Editor,
The Varsity.

The debate to be held next Wednesday evening at Trinity College confirms a suspicion that I have long held—namely that women are God's greatest mistake. For notice that they will be debating "God is man's greatest mistake". If this is upheld (as it cannot help but be), it will certainly relegate women to their logical tertiary if not solipsistic niche.

I was surprised, however, to learn that these creatures will be allowed to attend this debate. What a travesty! Surely one of the fundamental problems of the debate is to ascertain whether women exist at all.

We all agree that women are merely the outcome of a Divine backfire; and we are, in your debate, trying to point out that the Deity Himself is non-existent; indeed very possible, simply the illusory, illegitimate offspring of the Oedipus complex in reverse.

In any case, I and my colleagues will certainly be present to prove to these creatures that they do not exist, and even if they think they do, to make them wish they did not. Indeed we challenge the women of the university and particularly St. Michael's and St. Hilda's who think that they exist to be present on this occasion to prove it.

Sincerely yours,
"A St. Michaelsian".

Interment

The Editor,

It has come to our attention that the students of St. Michael's College and Trinity College have organized a public interment of the Deity, to be held in the Trinity College Chapel, Wednesday, February 2.

Nothing else could have brought us together to write you this encyclical. Would you please inform Messrs. Schonleber and Watson that they have been black-balled by our club, (which we should acknowledge is both Anglican and Catholic).

Celestially yours,

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Desiree and Brando

If you are familiar with the sepia-toned engravings common on the walls of the lecture-rooms in U.C., you will have some idea of what Desiree, now gracing the screen of the University Theatre, looks like. Except, of course, that Desiree is in technicolor and Cinema-Scope, it reproduces that same atmosphere of gracious ladies in Empire gowns, marble pillars and long corridors, mirror-like lakes and sombre poplars. Desiree is not, however, a sombre movie — far from it, considering the fact that it chronicles the life of a discarded fiancée of Napoleon Bonaparte. As the rejected fiancée, Jean Simmons spends very little time pining, and immediately sets about observing history and writing it all down in her diary. The picture covers the period of time from Napoleon's earliest ambition to send an army into Italy to his exile on St. Helena. But battles are ignored, campaigns slurred over, all in an effort to concentrate interest on the personal life of the Emperor himself. Unfortunately the effort is not considerably successful, since the only conflict between characters arises from Desiree's low opinion of Napoleon's concept of power, not, for example, from a hidden and flaming love affair that burns between them. The latter motivation is the sort which is best able to carry the spectator along with this sort of romantic nonsense, and would really be no worse a perversion of history than some of the events in the film.

Desiree is not, however, the worst sort of pseudo-historical romance, and chiefly by reason of Marion Brando's performance as Napoleon. Brando's rather surprising resemblance to the little Corsican has been very well exploited, and he has obviously studied assiduously those mannerisms which were supposed to have been Napoleon's. In addition, he has that incredible gift so rarely found among screen stars, of being able to give absolute conviction to every part he plays, to make of even the most shabbily written part a well-rounded character. In addition, Jean Simmons provides an excellent foil for him as the rejected Desiree. She also has the rare gift of credibility. For that reason, Desiree rises just a little above the average film, rather in the same way and for the same reasons that Garbo made a routine film like Queen Christina memorable. Technically speaking, it is a charming thing to watch, since the period it depicts is not often re-created in the screen. Finally, Alec North, whose harsh musical score for A Streetcar Named Desire was so impressive, has done equally well by Desiree, including a beautiful waltz melody which will probably outlast the picture.

Manuscripts Come To Roost

Coburn On Coleridge

By JANE GRIFFIN

lection of her own which will eventually go to the Victoria College Library.

In this interesting private collection is a rare 1812 edition of essays, published under the title The Friend, a first edition (1825) of his Aids to Reflection, a book which had "a profound influence on American idealism in the last century."

Also in this private collection are some of the notebooks used by Coleridge, and photographs of all those not actually in the collection, most of which are now in the British Museum.

At the present moment, Miss Coburn is engaged in editing these notebooks for publication. The big problem here, she commented, is getting his entries into some sort of chronological order. He had no system to his note taking, and in one of the books there is a gap of fifteen years between entries. The fact that this work has been going on for some time helps to make Tor onto the logical place for the Coleridge collection, she feels.

Miss Coburn first became interested in a study of Coleridge in the fourth year at Vic. She was inspired and encouraged to undertake the work by the late Prof. Pelham Edgar, head of the English department at Vic, and Prof. G. S. Brett, then head of the Philosophy department at U.C. After taking her M.A. here, she went on to Oxford and further study, where she obtained her B. Litt. degree, and first made the acquaintance of the Coleridge family.

Since then her work has included an edition, in 1949, of Coleridge's Philosophical Lectures, a work never before published, and an edition of The Inquiring Spirit, which is an anthology of his prose, "relating his thought to ideas alive in the world to-day."

As "just a sideline," Miss Coburn edited the Letters of Sara Hutchinson, Mrs. Wordsworth's sister, whom Coleridge loved very deeply. There is very little known about her, but Miss Coburn, through working on the letters, found her a completely charming and delightful person. "I got very attached to Sara," she commented.

Miss Coburn said that an open exhibition of the Coleridge collection was planned for the near future.

Preferred Seats To Students Now For Opera Fest

Advance tickets for the Opera Festival may be obtained until Friday, Feb. 4th at the SAC office or from SAC reps. Students and staff of the University are receiving preferred seats for the Opera. This is the sixth annual Opera Festival in Toronto, and brings together Canadian artists whose ambitions for operatic careers might otherwise have carried them abroad.

Nicholas Goldschmidt, musical director of the company will conduct Die Fledermaus and The Marriage of Figaro. Maestro Ernesto-Barbini will conduct the Italian opera La Traviata, as he has the past two years. The 1955 Opera Festival has been given stage direction by Herman Geiger-Torel and choreography by Celia Franca.

DRAMA

I strongly recommend Tea and Sympathy at the Royal Alexandra, but I don't suppose there are many tickets left now anyway.

The Crest has released their plans for the rest of this season. Twelfth Night finishes this week and The Biggest Thief in Town opens on Feb. 1st. An interesting note on this production is that a student actor, Les Lawrence has been hired to act in it. Following that comes a British play, Marching Song, a classic Russian farce. The Diary of a Scoundrel, Meeting At Night, a comedy by James Bridie, The Gift of a Serpent, a Canadian play by Thomas Mann, The Prisoner, a period production of Gentlemen Prefer Blondes and The Black Arrow.

Garcia Lorca's House of Bernard Alba has two more performances to go in Hart House.

BALLET

Starting Monday in the Royal Alexandra, two solid weeks of the Canadian National Ballet featuring a new ballet by Antony Tudor which claims to make the old Gaiete Parisienne look tame.

Vic Presents Mikado

It has been said that not a minute goes by that somewhere in the world someone is putting on The Mikado. This statement is undoubtedly true. Since 1880 when The Mikado was first produced by W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan, the operetta has been an instant success in many languages. Nearly everyone has heard

Nanki-Poo's song "A Wandering Minstrel, I" and the bright tune of "Three Little Maids from School."

This year for its 34th annual production, the Victoria College Music Club is presenting The Mikado under the direction of Godfrey Ridout and Geoffrey Hatton. The cast includes Anne Hossack as Yum-Yum, Ray Carl as Ko-Ko and Mary Thomas as Katisha with James Medcof as the Mikado. The production can be seen from Tuesday to Saturday evening next week at Hart House Theatre.

Betty-Jean Hagen plays her violin this Sunday evening at Hart House. Miss Hagen, one of Canada's better known musicians, has received liberal recognition of her ability to play the violin. On completion of scholarship studies at the Royal Conservatory in Toronto in 1951 she received the T. Eaton Company award for the most outstanding senior school graduate; she has also received the Pathe-Marconi Prize in Paris. The Harriet Cohen award to the most gifted woman musician in the British Commonwealth and last autumn she was awarded first prize in the Carl Flesch international competition for violinists, held in London.

Miss Hagen will play works by Schubert, Mozart and Beethoven. Her accompanist is Boris Roubakine of the Royal Conservatory faculty.

ICE BLUES FACE CARABINS TONIGHT

By JOHN WILSON

This weekend was the date originally set for the University of British Columbia's invitation basketball tournament, in which teams from McMaster, Varsity, and the University of Alberta were slated to meet the Thunderbirds in a round-robin series. Unfortunately for the future of East-West relations in the field of Intercollegiate sport, the plans for this event fell through, the lack of a sponsor being the main cause.

The British Columbia Athletic Round Table Society, who have already scored one in promoting the UBC-Varsity football game last November 27, were originally going to attend to the details of this affair also; but the executive of UBC felt they could not request the Society to shoulder another loss in the proportion of the one suffered in the fall. Thus the tournament, which was to have been played in UBC's mammoth Field House where the basketball court is big enough to hold three or four of the size of the one in Hart House, was dropped for at least another year. It is refreshing to note, however, that the West is taking such an interest in reviving all-Canadian Intercollegiate competition, something that has been dormant for too great a time.

It is also fortunate that because of this plan's failure, we in the East will not have to undergo the humiliation of seeing our Eastern representatives taken to the cleaners by our Western cousins, who are generally considered to be past masters of the cage game. While apparently superior on the gridiron it is unlikely that any of the Eastern Colleges would be matches for the powerful quintets that Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia have been producing with unceasing regularity in the last few years.

We can remember the spring of 1953 when the Nortown Tri-Bells faced the University of Alberta Golden Bears in the semi-finals for the men's Canadian senior basketball championship. The Bells, who in those days featured such clever performers as Bud Natanson, Ed Maynerick, Johnny Braithwaite, and the Thomases, Fred and Paul, won the series and proceeded against the Vancouver Cloverleafs in the finals; but only after the Bears had extended them to five close games. Stars for the Alberta quintet then were big Ed Lucht, and the MacIntosh brothers, Norm and Don. Lucht celebrated his farewell to Intercollegiate basketball last season in one of Alberta's league games, throwing in a fantastic 88 points as the Golden Bears swamped the University of Saskatchewan Huskies 114-37.

What makes the picture even less encouraging is that most of these high-scoring stars are still in action on the Western courts, or else they've been replaced by equally efficient ball-players. So, all considered, it appears that it's just as well the Blues are tangling with the University of Buffalo tomorrow night in Hart House, instead of journeying to Vancouver to rebuild the West's shattered faith in the relative quality of Eastern Intercollegiate sport.

Battleground . . .

. . . could be what they'll be calling Varsity Arena after tonight's struggle between the hockey Blues and the University of Montreal Carabins. In last Saturday's clash in Verdun the Carabins threw everything imaginable in the way of Jack Kennedy's crew, including bundles of peanuts from the stands, and didn't get penalized for it. Apparently the Maple Leafs aren't the only hockey team whose popularity rating in Quebec is almost nil. Every time the Blues appear in the Coliseum in Quebec City or in Verdun, they have to put up with an awful torrent of abuse both physical and vocal to preserve their victories, while at home such behaviour is frowned upon by all the interested parties, to say nothing of the disinterested spectators. There's no doubt that the Blues will be out to "clean the Carabins' clock" when they clash at 8:00 in Varsity Arena, and the net result will likely be the highest scoring output to date by the Blues; as well as a serious lesson for the Carabins in how to play hockey for the home-town fans without losing your head. Should be good.

From the Blue Room . . . Teams from the University of Buffalo get to strut in all departments at tomorrow's Athletic Night. Cressy McCatty's swimmers clash with the Americans in the Hart House pool, while wrestling and fencing teams will perform during the evening . . . The Blue boxers will be in Guelph for a meet with OAC . . . From all this noise about the current international war in the gridiron sport comes one interesting point. Officials of the ORFU, who are apparently almost caught in a squeeze play designed to remove them from Grey Cup competition, state that the original deed of gift of the trophy provided that the ORFU and the Intercollegiate Union would be able to challenge for the Grey Cup whenever they pleased. There was talk of Western doing just this in the fall of 1950 when they had that powerhouse outfit that laced the Blues 41-6 and 21-1 . . . Says the Green Og of tonight's scheduled hockey game, "No comment".

Blues at Full Strength for Tilt Montreal Without Quesnel, Hotte

The hockey Blues take to the ice in Varsity Arena tonight for their seventh game of the current Intercollegiate season with an eye to running their streak of undefeated games to eleven, at the expense of the University of Montreal Carabins. Playing at full strength for this important clash, the Blues are favorites to whip the Carabins who will miss the services of ace wingers Bernie Quesnel and Claude Hotte.

Quesnel is out for at least four weeks with a dislocated shoulder, sustained in a game with McGill two weeks ago. Hotte has been out of action since before Christmas with a dislocated knee, and will probably be lost to the Montrealers for the balance of the season.

The Carabins played to a 1-1 tie with the Blues in their last meeting a week ago, but have since hit the winning trail posting a 4-2 victory over Laval on Tuesday to move into second place, one point ahead of the McGill Redmen.

In last week's game the Frenchmen almost caught the Blues off guard, and only the clever work of Hugh Curry in the Varsity net, and a smooth defence preserved the draw for the Blues. Curry kicked out twenty-six Montreal drives in that game, while captain Red Stephen got the only Blue goal.

Now leading the league in points, the Blues' big first line of Dave Reid, Paul Knox, and Clare Fisher, will be out to expand their totals at the expense of U of M netminder Cyrille Guevremont. Stephen and Dave Jackson, the other half of the Blues starting lineup, are running in the fourth and fifth spots. Jackson is the league's most prolific playmaker with nine assists. Curry is the top goaltender with an average of 2.50 goals against in six games.

It's likely that the Blues are preparing to hand the Carabins some of the same medicine they were dishing out in Verdun last Saturday, when six penalties were called in the first period, although tempers may not flare under the watchful eye of goal referees. A win for the Blues will put them eight points in front of the University of Montreal, and just about assure them of the league title.

Game time is 8:00, and it'll be well worth the watching.

Trinity A's Thump Vic 3-1 To Move Into Second Spot

By JOHN VOJTECH

Trinity A's defeated Victoria Jrs. 3-1 in a thrilling hockey game yesterday at Varsity Arena. The win boosted the Trinity team to within one point of the front-running Vic Juniors in the Division 1, Group 2 standings.

The game certainly lived up to expectations as both teams played hard to win it. It was a rugged, fast-skating affair as the play rushed from one end of the rink to the other right from the opening whistle.

During one of these rushes which terminated around the Victoria net, Church of Trinity passed the puck over to McTaggart who made no mistake in picking the lower left hand corner. Before the period was over, Church again brought the puck deep into Vic territory from where he passed over to De Pencier for the goal. Saunderson of Trinity came close to adding another counter but his efforts were thwarted by Tanner's good play in the Vic nets. Gee and McLean starred for Vic defensively.

Vic started the second period by taking advantage of the play. They headed for the Trinity net. Newman got the puck behind the Trinity net and passed out front to Koshan who scored.

At the thirteen minute mark Johns of Victoria was penalized for delaying the game. This was the only penalty of the game until tempers flared toward the end. Taking advantage of this penalty, Trinity scored through the efforts of Russell from Lovering. That ended the scoring as far as both teams were concerned. From there on in it was a tough-checking game.

With but a few seconds remaining to play in the game, McLean of Victoria was sent off for charging. This almost started a battle between an unidentified Trinity player and McLean. However, cooler heads prevailed and the threatening battle did not develop.

Skule Trackmen Remain on Top

S.P.S. continued in their supremacy in indoor track and field Monday night, by winning the sprint medley relay. So far this season the Engineers' team sparked by sprinter Dick Harding has maintained an undefeated record. Other members of the team are Lindsay Drummond, Val Spring, Bill Gelling and D. Mason.

The other event run off on Monday was the 880 yds. won by D. MaGunter in 2:02.4. Gord Hueston of Vic tied with Bill Gelling of S.P.S. for second and Peter Watson of Vic was fourth.

The junior 880 had a small entry. Bob Lee won the event in 2:08 sec.

UC Tigers Score First Victory

By CHUCK DOLMAN

Yesterday afternoon, Sr. UC won their first game of the season, by posting a convincing 38-25 win over Sr. Meds. UC, playing an inspired game for the last two-thirds of the contest, came from behind to defeat a lack-luster Meds team, who had led 13-9 at the end of the first quarter.

Harry Wilson, UC's 6'5" centre played a strong two-way game, racking up 15 points and handling the majority of UC's rebounding. Harry had little trouble in sinking difficult set or jump shots, but at one stage of the game he missed four straight dog-shots before finally notching one.

George Patterson of UC once again displayed one of the finest jump shots seen in league play this year, and was the second highest scorer with 8 points, matched by Med's Dick Nero. The poor passing and foul-shooting of the Med's team were the main points in their dismal showing. Fred Patterson, though quite a crowd pleaser, added a measly four points to the Med's cause.

Led by the twenty point performance of ace centre, Jack Iwaniki, Law A hung on to defeat Pre-Meds 48-42.

Pre-Meds' big guns, Jerry Edelist and Gerry Lansky, were away off form most of the game, hitting for most of their points late in the struggle. Lansky ended up with eight points, and Edelist only 6. Irv Annelivity and Ralph Hull did most of the Med's early scoring, with 12 and 8 points respectively.

Ted Luck with 8 points and Herb Solway with six points also put in good efforts for Law.

Dentistry II Yr. defeated Meds III, 32-21. Dave Lamport led Denters with nine points, but Med's Rotterman led all scorers with 11 points.

In other major league action, Dent's IV Year defeated Trinity B's 29-21. Bayton of Dent's IV with 12 points led all the scorers.

UC's IV's, though way off their usual form, managed to win their third straight game without a loss by stopping Dent's I Year 44-25. Top scorers were Norm Mintyner and Mendy Somers of UC with 13 and 12 points respectively.

PHE Defeat Vic In Gals' Hockey

Physed I overpowered Vic I by a score of 2-0 in the girls' hockey action yesterday at the Arena. The teams started out fast but eager to get the first goal. PHE however completely disorganized Vic's attack with the line of Coohon, Aksmith, and Brojer leading the way. They had many good chances around the net but could not get the puck in behind goalie Lil Doidge of Vic.

In the second period Vic took the upper hand faking out everyone but Sylvia Kerr in the Physed net. PHE often had a hard time getting the puck out of their own end of the rink. The unusual stick-handling of Mary Foster of Vic (unusual for girls' hockey, that is) added colour to the game.

PHE came back to life in the final period overpowering Vic all the way. Some nice teamwork by the Physed forwards paid off when Sonny Aksmith skated in to blast a shot into the Vic net. The Physed gals kept up the same pace for the remainder of the game, scoring another goal with two minutes left. Brojer tallied this one from a scramble around the net. This made the score 2-0 and that's the way it ended. With only 30 seconds to go Haggert of Vic was called for slashing and sat out the remainder of the game in the penalty box.

Battle of Basket Season Buffalo's Horne at Blues

It will be one of the greatest players in Buffalo University's Basketball history against one of the finest teams in Varsity's history in the Hart House gym at Saturday's Athletic Night. Breaking all scoring records at Buffalo this season, "Jumping Jimmy" Horne, 6'1" forward for the Buffalos averaged 20 points a game for 23 matches last year and is even hotter this year. Set against the American star will be one of the most outstanding team units, built up of many Varsity greats, that Toronto has ever had.

This contest of champions is but one part of the big Athletic Night programme for Saturday, with the Baby Blues, currently Varsity's most successful basketball squad, meeting the Buffalo freshmen in the preliminary match, the Buffalo and Blue swimmers, wrestlers and fencers squaring off in other sections of the Athletic wing.

Rated one of the best in recent years the Buffalo club already has counted victories over Colgate, Western, Assumption and Buffalo State. A starting lineup of exceptional height seems to be one of the biggest Buffalo weapons. Going with Horne are Steve Sklar and Danny Kwiatek, both standing at 6'3" and another tall man is Len Saltman at 6'5" and 215 pounds. At guard the Buffalo club has two clever playmakers and good outside men in Dave Levitt and Kurt Lang. Whether these two are the match of Varsity's Don Fawcett, Leo Madden and Peter Potter is likely to be one of the biggest questions determining the outcome of the Athletic Night contest.

The last time the Buffalo team showed in Hart House they took an 80-59 drubbing from the Blues. That was only last year, but the American club has evidently improved much over the year. The Blues will probably assign George Stulac to guard the amazing Mr. Horne. In the 1953 meeting of the teams, when the Blues won by a lop-sided score George did the job, hooping a sure 21 points while holding Horne to a mere 10.

The Baby Blues, with five straight victories to their credit, are favoured to make it six when they take on the Freshmen of Buffalo in the preliminary game. Coached by Matt Mazza, brother to Vince of Hamilton Football renown, the Buffalos are considered a fine club but they aren't likely to match the depth of the Varsitytypes, favoured as they are with one of the best intermediate clubs in a long while.

Leading scorers for the Varsity, going to the Buffalo game are Don Fawcett with a 14 point average for 9 games, Peter Potter with 12.9 for as many, and George Stulac and Leo Madden with 8.7 and 8.5, also for 9 games.

Intermediate Gals Post Win Over Ryerson Gals 22-18

By NORMA WALSH

The intermediate basketball squad came up with a very sharp 22-18 victory last night over Ryerson. It was the first game of the season for the intermediates and they showed a very fine display of power.

Ryerson got off to a slow start and failed to answer Toronto's seven points in the first frame. They got back into the picture somewhat in the second quarter, however, with baskets by Grace Brookman, Maxine Jones, and Kay Russell. At half-time, the Blue and White held a 9-6 edge.

The Blue and Gold of Ryerson took advantage of a Toronto slump in the third quarter and, led by Kay Russell, scored eight points and took over the lead. Toronto's only answer was three free-shots netted by Marg Molnar, Irma Savajarvi, and Joanne Housley. Fine defensive play by Betty McAlpine and Jean Douglas held the intermediates well in check.

The Baby Blues regained their stride in the final ten minutes. Sharp-shooting Lillian Bobson led the way with six points, closely followed by Marg Molnar with three. Isabel Hood netted four for Ryerson, but the intermediates were able to hold their lead and go on to victory.

The game was a very close contest all the way. Both teams struck punch along the free-throw line, Ryerson missing over a dozen foul shots and Toronto eight. Better marksmanship in this aspect of the game might have meant victory for the visitors.

The intermediates' next game is on Monday evening at the Ryerson gym, when they face a powerful squad from MacMaster. Game time is 7 p.m.

Esperanto—A New Language

At the last United Nations Economic and Social Council meeting in Montevideo, Uruguay, a motion approving the purpose of Esperanto, the international language was passed. Since its aims coincide with those of the U.N., the Director of UNESCO was instructed to work together with the Universal Esperanto Association in promoting the use of the language.

Inteligenta persono lernas rapide la internacian lingvon Esperanton.

By NOGA KAPLANSKI

Esperanto estas la moderna, kultura lingvo por la tuta mondo kaj la praktika solvo de la lingva problemoj.

The idea of an artificial language is very old. Since the 12th century about 500 different international languages have been invented. Many great philosophers, such as Muhedin, Spinoza, and Leibnitz have seriously considered the idea of a common language that could return us to the times prior to the Tower of Babel.

Esperanto was invented by a Jewish doctor, Ludoviko L. Zamenhof in approximately 1880. Even as a boy he began to think about a language which the four lingual groups of his town in Poland could understand. He saw that people became hostile to (even killed) each other because they failed to understand the other man's German, Polish, Russian or Yiddish. After many years of using his language for prose and poetry, translations, conversation and correspondence, he published a text book for it, signed "Doktoro Esperanto" —the doctor who hopes.

The language was called Esperanto after its inventor. It is said to be spoken with equal ease by all nations, containing no sounds that are difficult for any group. The vocabulary is taken from the chief languages, 80% Roman, 16% German, and 4% of Slav origin. There are only 16 grammatical rules, as simple as possible, and the language contains NO exceptions. (French professors please note.) While other languages are difficult to learn and easy to forget, Esperanto teachers claim that this language is easy to learn, and difficult to forget, being mathematically clear and exact, and completely logical.

Any students who are interested in Esperanto, and would like to discuss the problems of an international language, its use, or application, are urged to contact Mr. Eichholz, MU. 2493, a teacher of Esperanto, and a member of Toronto's Esperanto Club.

CUP

Runneth Over

By DOUG STEWART

London: Students here are discussing plans to abolish freshman initiations. In the past these have been more rigorous than in Toronto. It is felt that anything involving more than Orientation is not allowed under the provisions of a university ruling made in 1934. Some members of the Freshman Orientation Committee have objected to freshmen being obliged to wear regalia, and it has been suggested that such activities as snake dancing make a poor impression on the citizen of London.

Alberta: A three year survey taken here revealed that in most cases students are unable to earn more than half the cost of attending university by working in the summer.

The survey was conducted by the Alberta NFCUS committee, which questioned one student in 40. The average cost of attending university over the three year period was $1,160. The average summer savings of a student are $544, or 47% of the yearly cost of his education.

To help alleviate this problem the President of the University of British Columbia directed a plea to B.C. business men to extend financial aid to more students.

Manitoba: Member papers of the Western University Press which have been making repeated efforts to reintroduce intercollegiate football to western colleges may at last be successful.

News reports from Edmonton, centre of organization activity suggest that the universities of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are favourably disposed towards investing sufficient funds to successfully operate a four team league.

The administration of the University of Manitoba is at present unwilling to undertake immediate steps in this regard in view of the minimum expense of $10,000 required to support a team. However, a committee of interested students has undertaken to raise the necessary guarantees through a system of pledges in which students promise to purchase a $400 student ticket.

If the University of British Columbia decided to join, it will be necessary to withdraw from the American Evergreen Conference. A referendum will be conducted in February to determine if students will be willing to form a Canadian league requiring a $6.00 increase in student fees.

SEEK STUDENT DISCOUNT

Discounts of as much as 10% for the student on merchandise purchased at specific stores may be instituted next year, it was revealed at the Ontario Regional Conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students held here Saturday and Sunday.

The plan, entitled Students' Discount Service, is carried on a large scale in the USA, so that students travelling from one city to another can still receive the discounts. The plan, as set up in the States, gives each student a ticket which he presents for his reduction.

At Saturday's conference, it was passed that "Ontario's Regional Vice-President be authorized to draw up an outline of the SDS plan as presented at this conference and pass on information to the various NFCUS chairmen in the region. That the plan then be presented to the councils for their consideration. And that the member Universities be authorized to proceed with the original provisions of the SDS plans at their discretion."

The tickets would be given out with the ATL cards at the first of the term and be good until the next September.

The meeting began on Saturday morning with a welcome address by Bill Angus and a speech by Doug Burns, National President of NFCUS. In the afternoon, the mandates of the various colleges were brought up for discussion.

Queen's reported that they were working out the average earnings of the students — based on a survey of almost all the students — in the move to give income tax exemptions below the figure required to take a person through University.

Peter J. Lewis of Trinity reported on the Art Competition.

HAT TRICK BY AKITT HOCKEY BLUES WIN 5-1

By JOHN VOJTECH

Led by a sparkling three goal effort by John Akitt, the Varsity Blues handed the University of Montreal Carabins a 5-1 defeat which practically eliminates the Carabins from any hope of winning the Queen's Cup this year. Don Cossar assisted on all three of Akitt's goals. Ross Woods and Dave Reid aided in the humbling of the Carabins.

There were over three thousand spectators at the game and they were slightly shocked to see Montreal take a one goal lead half way through the first period. What started out as a harmless rush by the Carabins developed into a goal as the hard working Claude Dagenais deflected one into the Blues net on a pass from Vic Bedard and Andre Roy.

The Carabins checked the top line of Knox, Fisher and Reid to almost a standstill. But when this line did break in on Carabin goalie Cy Guevremont, their shooting either became erratic or Guevremont would come up with a sensational save.

Taking advantage of the notice given to the top line, the second line of Cossar, Akitt and Woods decided to go on a scoring spree for themselves. Red Stephen aided them as he brought the puck into the corner of Carabin territory, passing over to Akitt. Johnny made no mistake in picking the top left corner for the goal. Both teams were short handed at the time.

The referees must have heard from someone that this game might develop into a rough game so they called eight penalties in the first period. This sufficiently cooled out any developing hot tempers as the rest of the game was quite quiet.

Early in the second period Ross Woods took a pass from Lou Appleby to send the Blues ahead 2-1.

The Blues continued to pound on Guevremont's goal in the third period. Cossar got hold of the puck at a face-off to the left of the Montreal goal, and passed it to Akitt who again picked the top left corner for the goal. This line was not yet finished with the Carabins as with a little more than a minute left to play, Akitt scored again on a pass from Cossar.

The top line was not to be denied, however, as they broke in on Guevremont. Try as they might they couldn't put the puck into the Carabin net. Then with but three seconds remaining, Dave Reid took a pass from Fisher and shot it behind Guevremont.

Down From The Blues . . . At times the Montreal team seemed as if they were an inexperienced junior club as they failed to hit their mates with properly placed passes . . . Tilton, Stephen and Fisher came up with their best games defensively . . . Jackson is a real game competitor. He was hit in the face by the puck shot by a Carabin player, but continued playing until the puck was safely out of Blue territory . . . Knox and Reid missed glorious occasions to score during the game . . . Knox on one occasion stick handled through the entire Carabin team only to have Guevremont bobble the puck sufficiently to allow it to fall outside of the net . . . Once a pass from Reid came to Knox who blasted one at the open corner of the net only to have Guevremont get his leg up to save at the last possible moment . . . Although Curry wasn't too busy in the Blue nets he came up with some nifty saves on Bradley and Dupont in the second period . . . Adams played quite well as he came up with another hard luck performance comparable to Knox and Reid . . . Bonnar also falls in to this category . . . For Montreal the only line with any life was that of Dagenais, Roy and Bedard . . . Blues again outshot their opponents by a considerable margin, 46-29.

Prof. H. J. Paton, Noted Philosopher Arrives Saturday

When interviewed yesterday by a Varsity reporter, Professor Fulton H. Anderson, head of the Graduate Department of Philosophy, said that its staff is now unique among Canadian University faculties through its having within its ranks two Academicians, one, a member of the British Academy, and the other, of L'Academie Francaise.

The latter is Prof. E. Gilson of St. Michael's College who was awarded an honorary degree last fall, along with the Queen Mother Elizabeth, at Columbia University. The other is Professor Emeritus H. J. Paton of the University of Oxford, who arrived in Toronto Saturday. He will conduct two graduate seminars on the campus here, one on Kant and the other in ethics.

Professor Paton is one of the greatest authorities on Kant, and the author of many books. His activities have included many of a non-academic sort. He has served in Naval Intelligence and after the First World War was a member of the Commission on Poland. He holds honorary degrees at Oxford, Glasgow, and St. Andrews.

Ontario NFCUS Regional Meets Here Student Aid Campaign In Spotlight

By JANE EDGAR

The most important matter on the board at yesterday's session of the regional NFCUS conference was the campaign for scholarships. Norm Chalmers, chairman of the campaign committee, presented his report on the progress towards the total objective of two million dollars, to be used to aid some 4,000 students across Canada.

The report stressed the importance of respecting provincial rights in education, which could be done by going to the provincial legislatures. Ontario, said

Chalmers, is well able to afford the proposed assistance, but lags behind the other provinces in per capita aid. Dr. Dunlop, the Ontario minister of education, is ready to see delegates, but as the program involves considerable expenditure and changes in policy, they feel they should see Premier Frost. To date the Premier has not acknowledged a letter of Jan. 6 requesting an interview.

Chalmers went on to say that the campaign has received initial publicity (important in an election year). Surveys are being made among students at several Canadian universities, and the committees are in touch with community organizations. Another national brief is to be presented in late February and there will be a debate on federal aid to students in the next session. In the meanwhile, Chalmers urged, work should be continued at the local level to build up a favorable climate of opinion.

Word came that the number of entries in this years NFCUS-Art Contest is 106, an increase of more than thirty over last year. Western moved a recommendation to the national conference to extend the maximum number of entries for next year's contest.

Doug Burns, national president of NFCUS, spoke on the sad state of NFCUS finances: over half this year's fees remain to be paid, and several universities are paying on the basis of former years enrolment.

Waterloo was mandated to collect and make available to interested universities information on weekend exchanges, with French-Canadian or American universities. McMaster was mandated to investigate debating rules, which at present are vague and far from uniform, and give the results to NFCUS and CUSA.

Cavall, Can Can, Cognac

"The Frenchman drinks cognac, which is very cheap here. He drinks it at night when he goes out, then in the morning when he gets up, then some wine for a change at lunch. It's not that he's alcoholic — it's just that he doesn't drink water. Who does?"

Thus stated Jean Cavall, well known actor, at the Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity house last Saturday. Mr. Cavall was giving the first time public preview of his new radio show "Club Can Can". The show centres about a Paris nightclub into which the listener is invited to come as a personal guest of the owner, played by Jean Cavall.

Mr. Cavall was asked how the French women stack up to the Canadian ones. He replied that never having seen them stacked up together he really couldn't say. He ended his appearance on a note of criticism — Canadians are not passionate lovers. In France, he said, the man knows how to flatter. "Cheri", he will say, "your kisses thrill me. They burn me with a fire. They sizzle, they burn my lips up! So next time we kiss, please take the cigarette out of your mouth."

Mr. Cavall's appearance was sponsored by Cosmoramic Productions, a new independent company recently established to produce radio and television shows, using exclusively Canadian talent.

Skule Cannon Trophy Goes Begging Find No Bleeders on Varsity Campus

This year looks as bad as ever for the Varsity Blood Campaign. Our objective is 1920 donations; up to the present we are assured of 1106.

An attempt was made to run

EXPORT
CIGARETTE

THIS IS A NEW HOBERLIN AD— READ IT!

We've had a lot of complaints lately about our running the same ad twice.

We realize this is a hardship for a good many of you, but you must recognize that there are a lot of people who want to read them a couple of extra times. Gives them a chance to figure the puns out.

Besides, we are too busy these days to be catering to people whose literary life is all wrapped up in the ads. Because we're having a sale right now.

That's why that $20 bill is burning up in the picture there. Just to remind you that to miss this sale is just like setting fire to a $20 bill (or two tens). Because you can save as much as $20 on many of the handsome Hoberlin fabrics, English worsteds, for example, that usually sell for $105, are reduced to $86.95 during this sale period. Other made-to-measure sale prices as low as $64.95.

All imported fabrics. Over 500 weights, colors and finishes to choose from. Gabardines, serges, worsteds, tweeds, melanges.

And what about a ready-to-wear overcoat? Are you going to sit there and wait until you're caught with your plans down? Why not play it smart . . . buy now while the selection is good and the price is lower . . . by about $15 to $20.

But if you don't act quickly, you're not going to get in on the sale. So don't just sit there brooding about the cost of living . . . come in and make a nice saving on our expense. We don't mind. And we'll back everything with our foolproof guarantee: Refund, alteration or exchange if you're not satisfied.

this year's campaign on a quota basis. Each faculty was given a quota based on its enrolment. The quota suggested was less than 25% of the enrolment for most faculties. The faculty reps were given the opportunity to refuse the quota if they did not think they could attain it. The times for donations were also chosen by the faculty reps. Six enthusiastic faculties accepted quotas of more than 25% of their respective enrolments.

Quotas have not been filled and there is much of the time allotted by the Red Cross still to be filled. We should now like to leave the remaining time open to those energetic faculties who wish to compete for the Skule Cannon Trophy, which the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering so kindly donated two years ago. The trophy rests in the hands of the hearty Forestry who won it at that time, with over 95% of the Foresters donating blood.

The cup will be awarded to the faculty with the highest per cent of donors over and above their original quota. It will be presented by the Carnival Queen, Judy Francis II POT, at an Athletic Night following the Blood Campaign. So far Victoria College, St. Michael's, S.P.S. and Knox, and P.H.E. have filled their quotas and are leading in the race for the Cup. The estimate is based on appointment cards handed in by faculty reps.

So come on Varsity — Let's Bleed!! Donate blood at the School of Nursing — 50 St. George St. In fairness to those who have already made appointments, please come only at the free times listed elsewhere in the Varsity.

The exhibits are now in the Debates Room at Hart House, and include exhibits from the other Universities. They will be judged in six classes by Jack Nichols, a Canadian artist. It was recommended that in future criticisms be given of each work presented.

Under NFCUS publications, it was reported that the Year Book would be published by the first of March. The weekly bulletin, Items, was presented and the conference felt that it was a good idea in spreading news from other universities around a campus.

Toronto, Queen's, Western, Ottawa University, St. Pat's, and Waterloo were represented at the conference.

School of architecture

Ever wonder what those "faces that we meet" around the campus are doing at university? That mob fighting for the door at Hart House at one o'clock must be here for some other reason than a 70 cent lunch. But since they obviously didn't have the sense (or lunacy, depending on how you look at it) to enter OUR course most of us ignore them and concentrate on our special interests. This is hazardous. We are in danger of becoming specialists who learn more and more about less and less, until finally we end up by knowing everything about nothing. The Architectural Society believes that one way of increasing the unity, and hence the effectiveness of this university, is by means of descriptive articles such as the following.

The Architect . . . His province is all of Life, since he designs shelters for all its activities from the two-holer to the palace. He must have a sound knowledge of business methods, a mastery of structural techniques, a sincere fondness for humanity, a wide knowledge of the humanities and social sciences, and, above all, a talent and sensitivity for the whole field of design.

His training is a five year course leading to the degree Bachelor of Architecture. Before graduation he must spend 12 months in construction work and in an architect's office, and after, two more years with a practicing architect before being admitted to the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada and allowed to practice on his own.

Throughout the course emphasis is laid on developing the INDIVIDUAL and on COOPERATION among these individuals. This attitude, in addition to producing good instruction from the staff, makes it possible for us to keep in operation our unique Student-Staff Committee. Composed of senior staff and reps from Architectural Society, the Committee, with either staff member or student as chairman, is a safety valve which merges divergent opinions into understanding and constructive policy.

The course is designed to progressively widen the student's horizons and simultaneously intensify his study of design. Design problems become increasingly more complex in upper years. "Late nights and bloodshot eyes" is our theme song. But it's worth it. The following are student comments on the course.

After all, it's not so bad being the only girl in a class of sixty boys, but I'm telling you it was rough at first. You have to be hard! But that is not telling you much about our course in the first year. When we first saw the timetable we were rather sceptical. What with Survey and Calculus and Statics it looked like it was going to be as bad as Engineering. Then we saw on the timetable the word DESIGN. It was really a lovely word — until the first day. We were taken to a huge bare room with a card at the door saying Lower Examination Hall. Little did we know that here we were to go through months of exasperating mental calisthenics. We were handed sheets of cardboard and told to play with it — explore it. So we cut it and scored it and folded and ripped it and bent it and tore it — we played with it all right. But we asked ourselves: So what?, we did this when we were six. But pretty soon we began to see that cardboard is not just something that shoes come in.

Then it was paper and wood and glass and thread and plastics and nylon and cloth until we got sick of them all. So we drew and sketched and painted — for the first time for some of us — and made photograms and montages. Then to finish us off we went to New York for a week. We walked and stared and walked and ate and walked and saw people — millions of them, how they lived and that they had 2.3 children and smoked 1.2 packages of cigarettes a day and had 4.2 ulcers at 39.7 and all because they lived in a world of science built by engineers. And so we came home to think and try to tell what we saw and rest our feet.

Although we do not have much time to think, the word DESIGN begins to be more than what is written on the pamphlet of a new cigarette lighter, and if I do not make any sense it is because I am in first year, but after all it is not so bad being the only girl in a class of sixty boys!

Second year, having completed basic design, begins to get to something more concrete. Besides reading the Varsity, these eager sophs have so far this year designed a rest shelter and information booth for the C.N.E., a cottage for a University professor, and a house (with undulating floors?) for a newly married couple — complete with working drawings. Future projects include a large residence with a scale model of the residence as well as various other problems.

Among the highlights of the year have been several field trips to Don Mills and second year's leading role in the first large scale constructive initiation to be held on the University of Toronto campus, namely the complete renovation of the University Settlement House.

It should now be evident that Architecture is the ideal course for anyone wishing to pursue their MRS. degree, being the camping grounds for 183 (out of a possible 187) adorable but lonely males.

Third year is Childhood's End. Designs, essays, labs, and sundry other items of term work come due at an uninterrupted, swift tempo: which really is Work. But this makes better students and ergo better men and Architects.

Materials and Methods and Planning become more particularized and deal with greater complexities. Skill in visual expression continues to be developed in drawing, painting, and model-making. Landscaping is added to a growing field of knowledge. History of Architecture moves into secular realms, and brings the studies up to the immediate past. Acoustics and Light are added to the curriculum. Mechanics is applied to Structural Design of steel and timber structures. Philosophy and Esthetics open up stimulating experiences for the student in thought and feeling, a most intimate concern of Architecture. Public Speaking, a useful exercise for any career involved with meeting groups of people, rounds out a full academic curriculum.

At the drafting board, problems of increasing complexity in the larger buildings, are tackled. Interspersed with these are shorter problems, which help keep the student loosened-up, and in which the emphasis is on quick thinking and the emotional content of the building.

The Fourth year — 26 faces locked up in the lower drafting room (known to the happier world outside as the lower examination hall), a windowless hot house wherein we toil. WE NEED A NEW BUILDING! For imagine a day begun with the sun and ended with a snow storm, with no idea of what happened in between. However, despite our surroundings, wonderful architectural schemes are born in great flashes of enthusiasm. In addition to a full timetable of lectures in structure, materials and methods of construction, political science, law, history of painting and sculpture, fourth year tackles a major problem involving the group planning of a civic centre.

After eight weeks everyone bears a mark of the arguing and belly-aching which cooperation brings forth. Life is full of surprises and disillusionments but we are learning to work together.

Most students when they look at our fifth year time-table make comments such as "what a soft touch this architecture is" or "no wonder you can sleep in so often". Many a fifth year man humorously encourages these unenlightened attitudes even though they constitute unjust criticism. The time-table has a vacant look not unlike an arts time-table, however, these large vacant areas, three and one half days to be exact, are labelled with that unique if somewhat vague word "DESIGN". This design is the suitable dessert of five years of study. Practically the whole year is spent on the planning of one building; each student chooses his own building, draws up a program of its requirements in the fall, plans it down to the smallest detail, including curtain fabrics and landscaping, and finally presents his solution in the spring with a series of drawings. For most practical purposes this design thesis is synonymous with fifth year architecture.

There are other courses of study which range through Town Planning, Economics, Structural Design, Modern World History and Political and Economic Trends, all of which help to put that academic polish on the graduating architect. Although he graduates with a precise knowledge of contemporary architecture his entrance into a profession older than the Egyptian pyramids is just the beginning in the acquisition of knowledge.

Two frosh and a frosh contemplating a piece of wire sculpture. On wall behind, space-frames and space-structures, some of their year's work.

Unmindful of the works of art around the walls, these second year hopefuls discuss various aspects of working drawings with assiduous intent.

Fantastic

This university's president has intimated that he considers it "preposterous" to suggest that the action of the Board of Governors in refusing the request of the SAC for an increased fee was a denial of the principle of responsible student government.

In his report to the Board of Governors, the president maintains that the Board and the Board alone has the right to decide, finally, what will be charged for students' fees.

Apparently the president looks upon the student government as one of the arms or appendages of the university. He believes that "non-curricular affairs of the student body are not extraneous to the educational undertakings of the university". While he ascribes first place in the university to teaching and research, and is loath to bring student affairs into the "main tent", he does feel that it is the concern of the university and its officials.

It is our contention that students' non-curricular affairs should not only be kept out of the main tent, but should not find space even in the same field with the curricular activity of the university.

President Smith regards it as "fantastic" to suggest that the university undergoes some interference with its integrity and autonomy when the governments refuse grants of money. However, in other portions of his report he refers to the difficulty the university is experiencing in operating effectively because of a lack of funds.

We maintain that that same difficulty is occasioned in the sphere of student government when much-needed money is refused. In addition to that problem, we have the one created by the simple, unadorned, refusal itself. It does, and very effectively, reduce student government to a state of puppetry executed by "able and devoted student executives".

In the case of both the university and the Students' Council, it should be remembered, as the president pointed out so convincingly last week, "he who pays the piper is tempted to call the tune". This may more accurately be rendered, "he who controls the paying of the piper, is tempted to call the tune".

As we believe that there are grave implications in the refusal of the Board of Governors to agree to the request for an increased fee, we believe too, that the control exercised over the financial health of the university by the governments also presents a real threat to the very integrity and autonomy that the president prides himself on.

The day is not far distant, in this age of increasing anti-intellectualism and good-guyism, when the university will be threatened and dangers will assail the foundations of this and other similar institutions.

We are saddened to see the president appeal twice in his report to outside professional interests for financial support of the university.

We hope that he is awake to the danger and at the risk of appearing "preposterous", we should like to reiterate that we do look upon the action of the Board of Governors as an interference with the principles of responsible student government.

At the risk of appearing "fantastic" we should like also to maintain that the alliance of this university with the vested interests of society constitutes a threat to both the integrity and the autonomy of the university.

The President Speaks...

The following is an extract from the president's report, particularly that section dealing with student organizations.

The non-curricular affairs of the student body are not extraneous to the educational undertakings of the University. They cannot, however, be given a stand under the main tent; teaching and research in the recognized disciplines have, and must, retain the primacy. We must be continually aware that the colleges, faculties, schools and institutes are educational units, not designed to promote that rah-rah spirit which pervades the Hollywood version of an institution of higher learning. If student activities outside the classroom interfere unduly with teaching and research, it is the clear duty of the University to correct that situation.

On behalf of the student organizations recognized by the Caput, the Chief Accountant of the University collected from the students during 1953-54, $206,384 in compulsory fees. In terms of dollars and cents, the administration of the non-curricular activities of the University is a large undertaking. Tribute must be paid to able and devoted student executives who have made it possible and desirable for the University authorities to leave in the hands of the student organizations the use of these funds.

It must not be overlooked, however, that the corporate body, the governors of the University have the responsibility for imposing the fees and the ultimate responsibility for their use. Any request from any student organization to have its compulsory fee increased by the Board of Governors must be considered by the Board in the light of several factors: the burden of other student expenses; the wisdom of any proposed extension of student activities; the budget of the student organization; and the fact that student organization fees have already been increased to a greater extent than tuition fees. If the Board is not convinced that the request for an increase is justified or that the increase would not be in the best interests of the institution, it must modify or reject the request.

Any suggestion that such action by the Board constitutes interference with the students' rights to self-government is preposterous. The requests made by the Board of Governors to governments for increased financial support of the University are not always granted. It would be fantastic to conclude that the governments were thereby interfering with the integrity and autonomy of the University. Governors, staff, and students must realize that their undertakings are subject to the availability of funds.

Steps should be taken to give more adequate information to the new student executives who take office each year, about the constitutional rights and responsibilities of the various estates which compose the University of Toronto. To the Board of Governors, to the Senate, to the Caput, and to student governments, certain rights are granted; and on each, certain responsibilities are conferred. Respect for this separation of powers and duties should be observed, while the privilege of any of those bodies to make recommendations to the others in the best interests of the University must be safeguarded.

It would be a kindness to first-year students if the "freshman reception" programmes in certain divisions conveyed a greater emphasis on academic work and on the importance of planning and using one's time at the University intelligently, to the greatest advantage.

Philosophy and All of Us

The "Campus Profile" on Fri. Jan. 28th, carried the following quotation by Peter Martin: "... I feel that Philosophers are the only people at university who get an education. In other topics you are just trained; in philosophy you learn to think."

Might I inquire, what is the nature of this unique-type of education that is obtainable only through the study of philosophy? The fundamental reason for undertaking any sort of education is to enable one to comprehend as fully as possible, the mysteries of as many things as possible. Philosophy is highly complex; I fail to see its exclusive study as having any value in giving an immature student the preliminary training he needs in the basic processes of reasoning, from which understanding stems. To study philosophy, for most students, means simply to revert to the high-school level of memorizing other people's theories, to form opinions for the sake of forming opinions on subjects only partially understood, and to brazenly pretend that the vociferous expression of these opinions shows evidence of their own lofty thoughts. Intellectual frauds!

To have a student assimilate volumes of information without analyzing the method by which this assimilation occurs, is to defeat the purpose of education: to wit, the development of reasoning power in order to understand things.

Hence, with the exception of Logic, Philosophy is an unwise choice of study for recent secondary school graduates.

By the way, Mr. Martin, wouldn't you agree that learning to think and being trained to think are the same thing?

SNFCUS

The Editor,
The Varsity.

SNFCUS has been approved, but do the students approve of it? No one knows. The closest things to student opinion were the mandates given to the SAC representatives by the puppet executives which are, as everyone knows, the creatures of student politicians perpetuating deadweight organizations to magnify their personal glory.

Why wasn't the real student opinion ascertained? Why wasn't a referendum or a vote taken?

The reason is that these so-called leaders are out of touch with the people they are supposed to represent. They are afraid to put their jobs on the block at the student polls.

Taylor House has put the question to a vote and it finds student opinion here overwhelmingly against participation in SNFCUS under the new terms. This may or may not represent campus-wide opinion, but this House feels strongly that some better effort should have been made to find out.

Hambourg Memorial

The efforts of the Toronto Music Lovers' Club to establish a Cello Scholarship at the Royal Conservatory were well repaid by the large audience which filled the Unitarian Church on Saturday afternoon for the Hambourg Memorial Concert.

The small string orchestra under Boyd Neel opened the program with the E flat Symphony by Anton Filiz which the Hart House Orchestra first broadcast last October. This time, the playing was smooth and refined, making this inconsequential music more appealing.

The group also gave a first class performance of Anton Arensky's Variation On A Theme of Tchaikovsky. Boyd Neel is a conductor whose excellence may escape those who are looking for flamboyance or histrionic display, but the quality of his musicianship is apparent to those who can hear what comes from an orchestra under his direction. Following his simple, unobtrusive but clear motions, the orchestra plays with grace and incisiveness. His ability to give meaning to music, by integrating sustained phrases with subtle inflection, was shown in the last movement of the Filiz symphony, and, most beautifully in the last of the Arensky variations. If, as a recent Var-

Schubert's Shepherd - on the Rock - has her style of singing brought out the emotional quality of the music. On Saturday her singing of Handel's As When the Dove was perfect, but plain; Purcell's Hark the Echoing Air of Triumph Songs was facile when it should have been powerful.

Bach's D minor Concerto for Two Violins I find one of his less interesting works, except for the vigorous last movement. In the first two movements the accompaniment was ragged and occasionally out of tune, which didn't help. But the playing of Geza de Kresz, by its style, vitality and warmth gave us the highest musical experience of the afternoon, and was one of those rare occasions when we hear an intelligent musician. efficient, cold, and unaccountably nervous.

The Toronto Music Lovers' Club, the Royal Conservatory, the Musicians' Union, conductors, soloists and patrons all deserve our thanks for Saturday's fine concert. But so also do the fifteen musicians who generously gave their time, played with sincere enthusiasm, and yet were not named on the program. This attitude to good musicians which seems so shamefully common in Toronto, puts us too close to the days when Haydn ate in the kitchen.

Hart House Of A Sunday

QUIET WEEKEND

By MICHAEL CASSIDY

Imagine a centre of human activity deserted. Union station, the University. A lone straggler still milling over the deserted pavements. Doors shut, windows dark.

No need for this useless imagining. Hart House, Sunday afternoon, is this picture of desolation.

Upstairs from the front door, the Hall Porter sat, looking into space. Gone was the customary crowd of first-year men with their anxious questions. No one was there to talk to him. Nearby, three or four undergrads were subjecting themselves to images and ideas from the minds of other men, or empty regarding - nothing. Others tried studying - but the emptiness and silence acted on them, too. Even the footsteps in the corridors seemed to echo in a slower measure.

In the Great Hall, the tables were bare. Seven or eight music stands stood in the middle of the room; in place of the Warden's table, a semi-circle of chairs. The kitchen doors were locked. Gone were the white-coated staff, the busy steam, and the smell of food in your mouth.

Downstairs, the Arbor Room, 'living room of the University', was empty, locked. In the Art Gallery, a lush red nude created no excitement, as she ate watermelon and watched from the wall: no-one was there; no notice.

A lone professor sat in the library, seeing the dirty snow without understanding it, and flipping the pages of a book. He rose, left, and the books were without light. On the table, lay J. M. Barrie's 'My Lady Nicotine', and a book on the themes of love as told by seven French authors.

Strains from 'Die Meistersinger' echoed into the pitch-black corridor

The Return Of The AVR

For two cold and desolate winters this University has felt bleak and forlorn. The archipelago of gray buildings has stood severe and isolated. Biting winds and devastating frost have poured through the widening channels of disinterest, and have frozen activities, in an insular pattern. These solitary structures have been chilled, to their roof-tops and rattled to their cores by severe temperatures numbly dancing below zero. They have had no resistance to the cold.

The warmth of friendship and sincere concern has been missing. For two long years these buildings have not been able to laugh when recalling their experiences, nor happily dance when very proud. They have not been able to join in a note of spirited harmony, nor present themselves as a united chorus of the University. They had lost their All-Varsity Repue. This is a big university. It is very impressive and can be very impersonal. It is not too easy for the student to feel that his is part of such a large organization, nor find any means to identify himself with the University at large. The SAC would very much like to return something to the campus which would help bridge this gap. It is the council's hope that in 1955-56 the A.V.R. will come back. BUFFALO CAGERS TOP BLUES 71-57

By JOHN WILSON

About two weeks ago a story in Le Quartier Latin, the student newspaper of the University of Montreal, referred to Varsity's hockey Blues as "une equipe formidable", summing the whole thing up in as few words as possible. Thinking about the depth of meaning behind that expressive French adjective, we began to wonder just how far the Blues could go after they win the Queen's Cup and the Intercollegiate Hockey championship.

In the season of 1920-21, with Dr. W. A. Dafee as coach, and with Dr. Joe Sullivan in goal, the Blues recorded the most perfect season ever, winning the Intercollegiate championship, topping it all off with the Allan Cup. In 1925-26, the Blues again won the College title, and after defeating the Ontario and Quebec representatives by large margins lost out to Fort William in the final series for the big silver trophy. Captain of that team was Jack "Red" Porter, and Dr. Sullivan was still playing in goal. Conn Smythe was coach then as he was when the same team went to the Winter Olympics as the Varsity Grads and won the hockey championship for Canada.

Actually there is no reason why the Blues shouldn't challenge for the Allan Cup again, other than the fact that examinations present a very healthy obstacle to the formation of any real interest in the possibility. The cup was originally meant to be a challenge trophy, and in its early years its holders sometimes played only three or four games a season to defend their title. Before the First World War, there wasn't any maximum age limit in Junior competition as there is now, but a minimum limit instead. St. Mike's High School iced a team about that time that had several youngsters on it, and they were declared ineligible for junior competition. So the whole team turned senior the same season, challenged for the Allan Cup, and won it.

Actually, the Blues would compare favourably with any of the teams in the OHA senior 'A' group this season. Not a few of the Blues are as good as anything playing in the senior circuit, and some of them are probably good enough to be playing in the NHL. For one, we would like to see it happen, and if not the Allan Cup, at least an exhibition game with one of the Senior clubs on that off weekend late in February, just for the sake of comparison.

Of course when you come right down to it, we don't have to rush in to this thing because the Blues have a powerhouse this season. Next winter Varsity is likely to be graced with just as strong a club, with only three or four of the present members graduating. The addition of such clever Junior performers as Ken Linseman from St. Mike's and Mike Elik from the Marlboros, would make the picture even brighter but that won't be the case. The CIAU now regards the OHA Junior 'A' as a professional league, and graduates of its ranks may not play in the Intercollegiate Union. Looks like Reid, Knox, and Jackson just made it under the wire. The decision was made last spring but it appeared to be directed against Varsity, who had the makings of a strong club bolstered by additions from Junior ranks, so the CIAU gave the Union a year of grace.

Baby Blues Whip Buffalo Frosh As Dacyshyn Scores 21 Points

By CHUCK DOLMAN

The Varsity Baby Blues, in the preliminary game of last Saturday's Athletic Night proceedings, gained their sixth straight win, and their seventh in nine starts, by whipping the Frosh of the University of Buffalo 80-61.

The game kept to a fast pace, due to the speedy dribbling of the guards of both teams bringing the ball out of their own ends. Best example of this was Buffalo's Marty Meidel, who is probably the fastest man to appear on the Hart House court in some time. Not far behind Meidel was the rapid work of Buffalo guard Ken Freer and Varsity's Jerry Wojdon and Ruby Richman.

High scorer for the game was Buffalo's Bob Bohm, who accumulated 25 points and was Buffalo's only consistent scoring threat. Most of his points were a result of excellent rebound work and a fine jump shot. Meidel and Freer were Buffalo's other high scorers with 11 and 10 respectively.

Once again, "Jumping John" Dacyshyn, the Seconds' answer to the Buffalo Bulls' "Jumping Jim" Horne, led the Varsity scoring; this time garnering 21 points. Dacyshyn's rebounding, which leaves little to be desired, was marred, however, by his somewhat erratic shooting, which stopped John from adding another 20 or 25 points to his total.

Guards Mike Baida and Frank Palermo exhibited some fine long distance set shooting, and they ended up with 11 and 7 points respectively. Ruby Richman again displayed some spectacular driving layup shots for his eight points. Ed Rigby, always a late starter, and a prolific scorer once in the game, displayed marvelous accuracy in his running one-hander and triggered ten points.

The combination of Palermo and Baida left the crowd gasping at something which is not often seen in College ball. Palermo deftly picked off a Buffalo pass and broke in the clear toward the Buffalo basket, but missed his unmoled layup shot as it hit high on the backboard. Baida, cleanly picked off the rebound and also missed touching the basket with his shot. The crowd was also amazed to see Varsity miss eight rebound shots in a row until Norm Reynolds rolled the ninth around the rim and in.

It was remarkable to hear the Buffalo rooting section, which practically matched that of the home crowd's, considering that it was comprised of only one man, stormy Buffalo coach Matt Mazza,

Jimmy Horne Hoops Amazing 34 As Bulls Display Brilliant Offence

By MOISHE REITER

A powerful surge in the second half, after a first period of indifference, has been enough to win several ball games for the Varsity Blues this season, but against the University of Buffalo Saturday night, there was no second-half comeback. There was only a persistent domination of play by Jimmy Horne and his mates as visiting University of Buffalo thoroughly depressed the Blues and their fans, winning easily 71-57 in the Athletic Night feature. It was a brilliantly consistent performance by Horne, scoring 34 points on the night, that made the Buffalos and broke the Blues.

Zone against zone on the Hart House "half-court" gave the Varsity squad a taste of what every visiting team has had to take from them, brought out their every weakness, and, excepting spurts of fine play, made the Blues seem overmatched. Having no real advantage in height and being largely out-jumped for rebounds, the Buffalo team still managed to take control under and around both baskets. Often Varsity players would go up, reach for the ball and look shocked as it flew through their hands into the waiting arms of the Buffalos.

A magnificent showing of two-way power by Horne put the Blues in poor light by contrast. While scoring his 34, Horne also was the outstanding defensive man on the floor, breaking up Varsity plays, stealing the ball and holding the Buffalo zone together against desperate Blue assaults. Advance notices on Horne's excellence were taken with several grains of salt since, in his last appearance on the Hart House floor, he was well overshadowed by George Stulac. In definite fashion he proved himself this time, very nearly tying the Hart House scoring record.

Top of the Blues on the night were Leo Madden and Peter Potter, but they went it alone for a good part of the game. The Blues seemed incapable of any consistent attack, working in fits and starts. Passing was poor and organization not evident for the most part. Effectiveness was lost in several cases when Blues, heavily checked had to start looking around for a team mate, not quite sure where their buddies were. Still Potter and Madden, driving as if they couldn't read the hopeless score, cut through the Buffalo zone, scored on neat jumps from outside and checked the visitors in most annoying manner. Madden's 19 and Potter's 13 were the best for Varsity on the night.

Only one fast break was worked successfully by the Blues through the entire game. Most of the time excessive dribbling and uncertainty of just what to do with the ball slowed up the breaks and gave the Bulls time to get into formation around their basket.

Buffalo showed a well-balanced club, with little Chuck Daniels setting up plays from the outside and driving in for 11 points on good openings while Kurt Lang also showed a sharp eye, hitting for 8 on a one-hander on those occasions when the Varsity zone held.

Blue Bits: Three fouls called against George Stulac in the first quarter looked just a little cheap. Still they were enough to make George hesitate about getting right into the thick of things. Refs seemed to be leaning a little backwards. . . Blues were missing lay-ups, just wasn't their night. . . Blues meet Nortowns Wednesday in St. Mike's, Queen's Saturday in Hart House.

Ice Seconds Try Osgoode Here Tomorrow Afternoon

Varsity Intermediates tackle the Osgoode hockey team Tuesday afternoon at Varsity arena in the second meeting of these two squads this season. The Intermediates registered a 9-2 triumph in the first encounter, the season's opener for Varsity.

Although only able to score twice against the Intermediates in their previous tilt, the Legalties were obviously sadly lacking in condition and with another month of hockey behind them should be greatly improved in this department. The Varsity club they will face though will be out to hang up their first win in three outings, having dropped the one to Western and tied with Ryerson here last week.

Injuries will lend a strong hand to the Osgoode cause with Mert Wright, Ted Lotocki, and Dud Kearney of Varsity all still on the limp. Wright suffered a badly gashed ankle in the Ryerson game which will sideline him indefinitely. Of the three Dud Kearney is the only possibility to return to action Tuesday. Also lost to the Intermediates, due to academic pressure, is Joe Walker. The big right winger who ended last season with the Blues has proved a very effective penalty killer to date with Seconds.

Top point getter to date for the Intermediates is center Ian Morrison having collected four goals and two assists in the four games played. Also a four goal man, although missing from the squad for the last game, is Ted Lotocki who will be back in action when Varsity tackles Western here in Toronto in their return game. Congratulations are also in order for another Intermediate forward Doug Court who took time out from his hockey activities to snag second spot in the Senior Men's figure skating championships here in Toronto a little over a week ago.

Face-off time for the Varsity Osgoode encounter at the arena Tuesday afternoon will be the usual 4:30.

Buffalo Fencers Defeat Blues

University of Buffalo fencers edged the University of Toronto team 14-13 at Saturday's Athletic night, in what was one of the best meets held in Hart House in some time.

SPS's George Montgomery was best for the Blue fencers, winning five bouts and suffering only one defeat. Varsity's Marty Nash spoiled a perfect night for Buffalo's Castillon, epee champion of New York State, taking one bout from him in the final division.

The University championship in the epee will be decided this Wednesday at Julius Alpar's Fencing Academy. Next action for the Varsity fencing team will be the weekend of February 12, when they travel to Montreal for the Intercollegiate championships with McGill.

Jr. Skule Laces UC 7-1 To Tie For Group Lead

The Skule cannon was popping again last Friday when Jr. SPS rolled out the heavy artillery to blast Jr. UC, 7-1, thus moving into a first place tie in Group II. The scantily armed Redmen offered little resistance to the bombardment as they settled deeper into the group cellar.

Wilson shot the Engineers into an early lead, firing one from a scramble at the 5:15 mark, with goalkeeper Rook lying at the side of the net.

Skule were in complete command from that point on, but were unable to add to their lead till 18:20 of the first, when Surtel slammed in Wilson's rebound. Just twenty - seven seconds later, Thompson drove a screened shot from the blue line that Rook never saw, to make it 3-0.

Seconds before the end of the period, Goodman, who played a hustling game throughout, took advantage of a defensive lapse on the part of SPS to bag the only Redmen marker.

The 3-1 half-time lead might well have been greater, as play was in the UC zone during the majority of the first frame. The score was kept down more by erratic shooting than by good defensive play.

SPS started fast again in the second period, as Gray scored what was probably the prettiest goal of the game, at 3:50. Picking up the puck in his own end, he broke down the right boards and blasted a rising shot that rattled off the left post into the net. Patterson followed quickly, crashing through the defense to deke Rook, to make it 5-1, at 4:10.

Gray added his second marker in the ninth minute, dashing rink-length again, to pick the lower-left corner. Pezack of UC was serving a kneeling penalty at the time.

Bielawski ended the scoring at the 11:10 mark, taking a relay from Wilson and firing to the short side. The Engineers were content to coast from then on, though Wilson was in for another good chance, his shot hitting the post and passing behind Rook, but not into the net.

The line of Wilson, Surtel and Bielawski, with Gray, were best for Skule offensively, while Topping and MacDonald led the defense. German was adequate, though underworked in the Engineers' nets. Goodman and Cropper were the most aggressive of the UC forwards, and Pezack was strong on the defensive.

Short Shots . . . Law dumped the Architects, 7-1 in the second game. Angus was top man for the legal eagles, with four, while Strubank sank two and Ballantyne one. MacGinnis potted the only goal for the Designers . . . Topping of Jr. SPS was assisted from the ice in the second period of the first game, after he crashed the boards on an offensive foray . . . Pezack of UC played almost the entire game for the undermanned Redmen (they had four subs), resting on two shifts and one penalty . . . Referee Clare Fisher worked half of the second game with no whistle, waving frantically to partner Dave Ried when he spotted an infraction.

Wrestlers Smother Buffalo With Record Score, 40-3

In their most decisive win this season the University of Toronto Senior Wrestling team defeated an ever-threatening University of Buffalo 40-3 in Hart House Saturday night. This was the first time that the Toronto seniors have gone into a meet at full strength and the clear victory shows the calibre of the team. It was the most decisive victory Toronto has ever had against an American college team.

Leading off the meet, Wally Kami-Takahara, (T), 123 lbs, picked up the first five points by taking a fall against Don Miller, (B), in the second round. Jack McQuat, (T), 130 lbs, pinned Harry Hain, (B), also in the second round for another five points. Gord Stephenson, (T), 137 lbs, pinned William Furlong, (B), in the third round. The fastest, and toughest wrestling seen to date this season in Hart House saw Glen Lysnorn, (T), 147 lbs, pin George Movesian, (B), in the third round.

At 157 lbs, Paul Hickey, (T), pinned Robert Uhl, (B), in the second round. Wrestling again at 167 lbs, up ten from his regular 157 lbs, Orie Loucks, (T) lost a decision on points, after full time, to Paul Snider, (B), undefeated in college wrestling. Bob Waugh, (T), 177 lbs, back from a shoulder injury picked up at OAC last week, pinned Peter Rao, (B), in the second round. Varsity picked up five points on a default when Buffalo did not place a man in at 191 lbs. At Heavyweight, Harry Robinson won one of his toughest fights of the season, pinning Fran Woldzik, (B), late in the third round, to make the final score 40-3.

Mural Squash Results

Intramural squash was struck by an epidemic of defaulting this year, and it looked for a while as though this league would fold. Several teams were dropped instead, leaving a healthy league of eight, eight, and five teams respectively in Groups I, II, and III.

Undefeated in four matches, both Dents A and B lead Group I, followed by Sr. Meds (4-1), and Sr. SPS (2-2). These teams seem headed for the four Group I playoff spots but a strong finish by Meds III and the Trinity A's could change their direction.

Pre-Meds (5-0), Law (4-1), and Dents C (3-1) are making a strong bid for the three playoff spots in Group II. Their strongest competition comes from Jr. SPS (2-2), Jr. UC (2-3), and Trinity B (2-3), who could catch Law or Dents with a sweep of their remaining games.

The tightest race is in Group III, where Meds IV, Dents D, and Dents E, are continuing the fierce Dents-Meds squash competition. SPS IV can still gain a tie for a playoff position if they win both of their remaining two games.

On the whole, the group competition is quite close, and the matches in the next few weeks will play an important part as to which teams will enter the post-season fling.

Victoria Bans LPP Leader Tim Buck From Residence

Victoria College authorities have refused to allow Tim Buck, national leader of the LPP, to speak at a men's residence "smoker". Mr. Buck had agreed to address the men of Gate House, their common room. However, the appearance of a paid political organizer at Victoria is prohibited by the Board of Regents in a ruling passed some time ago. The men of Gate House were unaware that any such ruling existed until after they had invited Mr. Buck, but had informed him college permission was necessary.

President A. B. B. Moore and Principal H. Bennett of Victoria had no statement on this situation for the Varsity.

Gate House president, James Thatcher, had this to say: "Everyone is afraid of communism, but no one seems to know anything about it — 'Ignorance never settles a question', Disraeli once said. The men of Gate House wanted to hear the other side of the story, true or false, and to be able to question its spokesman, Tim Buck, in the informal and friendly atmosphere of a Gate House 'smoker'. We have been denied this privilege."

"Smoker" committee chairman, Ted Howell, commented: "It appears that college policy does in effect prohibit this event. However, the ruling is sufficiently obscure to puzzle most members of Gate House, and it was only after careful explanation that its validity was made clear to me. Nevertheless I still strongly disagree with the policy, on the grounds that it is capable of being used in a discriminatory fashion, and that it prohibits the men of the house from choosing the speakers that they wish to have."

Donald Cock, Gate House resident, made this statement to the Varsity: "In view of the high residence fees, Vic seems to have a great desire for a buck. Now they're turning one away." Thomas Jardine, another member of the house, asserted, "I feel that our democratic principles have been insulted."

Mr. Buck issued this statement to the Varsity: "I am very much surprised that the authorities of Victoria College should place any obstacles in the way of the students hearing all sides of a question of such high national importance. I have enjoyed several opportunities of addressing the students of Toronto University during the last 28 years, including Victoria College. I don't remember any occasion on which the authorities of Toronto University have had any cause to complain that I have abused the privileges granted me. In the circumstances, it appears that the technical fact that I am paid by the party for which I speak, and not by the government, is being used as a means by which to prevent the students from hearing the only actual alternative policy for Canada." (Mr. Buck addressed a meeting of the Trinity College Literary Institute a few days ago.)

McCarthy Made To Go? St. Mike's Men Decide

The Ashes of McCarthy will be stirred again on the campus tonight.

The resolution "That Senator McCarthy and his methods must go" will be debated at St. Michael's College, in Brennan Hall at eight o'clock.

Justifying the Junior Senator will be John Leo and Frank Connelly. "The problems as I see it," said Leo, "is the widespread, brutal ignorance of what McCarthy is trying to do, as well as what he has accomplished."

"The frightening thing," according to Connelly, "is that the Liberal mind has produced a picture of Joe McCarthy huffing and puffing to blow down the house of freedom, while these hordes of unwitting tools of the Communist conspiracy are gnawing, termite-like, at its foundations."

Upholding the resolution will be Ian Scott and Bob Connors. "It is self-evident," said Scott, "that McCarthy is subversive of the government and the constitution of the United States. Fortunately this is no longer a live issue, since McCarthyism is fast receding in influence. The unhealthy climate of fear, however, still exists in the citadel of democracy."

Platinum Exhibit Opens at Museum

A rhodium-plated key will open a display in the geology galleries of the Royal Ontario Museum today — a display of the six platinum metals.

Platinum, for the information of all arts types, is not used solely to frame those gorgeous (and rather expensive) solitaires that your women friends love to flash around. It is also used in the chemical industry, for making tools and in dental work. (Who can afford platinum bridges?) These and many more fascinating facts will be demonstrated in the display.

A ton block of ore and twenty 3D views will be the features of the display, which shows the history, processing and uses of platinum and its sister metals — palladium, rhodium, ruthenium, iridium and osmium (thank you, Skule!). The exhibit, which will be here for about a year, should be of interest to all Canadians. Canada produces a third of the world's supply.

Ban 'The Moon Is Blue' For Production at OAC

Guelph: (CUP) "The Moon is Blue", scheduled for production in the Winter term at Ontario Agricultural College, has been cancelled "on moral grounds", it was recently announced. The Union Literary Society, who chose the play, have decided instead to produce "The Heiress."

A committee of the Society, composed of the President, the Honorary President, the Director and the Dramatics Manager, retracted the play rather than subject the campus to a bitter con-

Debaters Will Determine If God Is Man's Mistake

Tonight God will be investigated. Under the auspices of the Trinity College Literary Institute, four theological minds, two of them from St. Michael's College and two from Trinity, will bring themselves to bear upon the entire question of the Divinity and His place in the universe.

The means of accomplishing this investigation will be a debate on the topic, "Resolved, that God is Man's greatest mistake," to be held in the Library of Trinity College, today, Wednesday, February 2, at 7.45 p.m. Speaking for the affirmative, John Schoneker, IV St. Michael's, commented "I can do little more than agree with Israel Zangwill (1894-1926) when he says, 'Scratch the Christian and you find the pagan — spoiled.' (Children of the Ghetto, Book II, chapter 6.)"

Barry Watson, IV Trinity, apprehended as he emerged from a prophetic trance, was heard to say, "Only occasionally in the whole sweep of human history has the Self-Existent revealed himself to Man. This Wednesday will be one of those rare occasions, when we of the affirmative shall be prophets to all of Mankind."

Speaking for the deists, Mr. Charles Mark, IV Trinity, stated, "The resolution may be described as the good old Anglican, Sir Thomas Browne, described a certain mediaeval catechism of infidelity — 'It is the Rhetoric of Satan, and may pervert a loose or prejudicate belief.'" Mr. James Daly, IV St. Michael's, was at prayers, and could not be reached for comment.

All students of any sex or religion whatsoever are invited to attend by the college association.

IRC Speaker Prof. Keirstead Foreign Policy

Guest speaker at this week's meeting of the International Relations Club will be Professor Burton S. Keirstead, who joined Toronto's Economics Department from McGill this past year.

Professor Keirstead was a member of the Canadian Delegation to the League of Nations in 1937; and Canadian Member of the "International Economic Association," reported Basil Moore. For the past ten years, he has broadcast for the C.B.C. on the International Circuit. Prof. Keirstead has also covered three sessions of the U.N. for the C.B.C.

With this broad background, Prof. Keirstead will introduce the topic, "Canadian Foreign Policy." The I.R.C. meeting will take place at Falconer Hall, on Thursday at 4:00 p.m.

McCarthy Sits On Fence After St. Mike's Debate; House Divided Like U.S.

McCarthy has been left sitting on the fence.

At a Monday night debate of the St. Michael's Oratorical Society, the house voted 31—30 in support of the speeches of the government, who contended "That Senator McCarthy and his methods must go." But a vote on the resolution itself came out 36—31 in approval of the Senator.

"McCarthy as a symbol of fear in the United States must go," argued Ian Scott, first speaker for the government. "He has taken advantage of the confusion surrounding the tremendous national and international problems following the war; he has sliced through that confusion which politics and economics have created, and which fear has magnified."

"The majority of the United States is disturbed by the revelations of Communist espionage, and it will support any man offering a pat solution to its problems. McCarthy is this man."

Scott accused the Junior Senator of being a "Mike Hammer type of politician, formed by a Mickey Spillane type of mind."

"McCarthy has created a great illusion," continued Scott, "that we must be with him against Communism, or against him."

Referring to his campaign as one with "all the elements of a religious crusade", Scott called it "grossly oversimplified, emotional, irrational, and — in McCarthy's own words — anti-egghead."

"The heart of the problem is that McCarthy has created mistrust of the American government and its oldest, most cherished ideals. 'McCarthyism' represents an attempt to subvert the best elements of the Constitution."

"There are a great many other implications in the McCarthy issue aside from that of Communism," concluded Scott. "McCarthy has failed to produce a long-term solution to any of them; and the problem of Communist espionage in the United States government remains." In defense of the Junior Senator, Frank Connelly, the first speaker from the opposition, asserted that "at the heart of what is derisively called 'McCarthyism' lives the very principle of Western civilization the axiomatic tenet that man is entirely responsible for the intellectual choices he has made in the exercise of his free will."

"The true difference between McCarthy and his allegedly sophisticated opponents," according to Connelly, "is not that they propose a civilized and charitable course, while McCarthy is Caliban; the difference is that he takes man seriously, while they insist that man is morally a vegetable and intellectually an eternal child."

Connelly claimed that the McCarthy rationale is a consistent one. "Certain people have certain ideas, ergo their actions must serve and be determined by the ideas. The shameful joke of this era is that this compliment to the supremacy of the mind is being taken by the Liberal intelligentsia as the supreme affront against the intellect, as a sordid assault of Know-nothingism on reason."

Speaking of McCarthy's constitutional position and methods, Connelly said that "he has been concerned only with Communism in government."

"A government office is a privilege and not a right... In the interests of national security the American government has adopted the theory that although a man may be innocent (Continued on Page 2)

ished ideals. 'McCarthyism' represents an attempt to subvert the best elements of the Constitution."

"There are a great many other implications in the McCarthy issue aside from that of Communism," concluded Scott. "McCarthy has failed to produce a long-term solution to any of them; and the problem of Com-

Feasting, Skating Promote SHAREing

Students at the University of Toronto should make provision now in their tight post-Christmas budgets for a generous contribution to the SHARE campaign which will run from Feb. 14 to 28. SHARE stands for Student Help to Asian Relief and Education and means what it says — share.

This year's goal for the University of Toronto is $6,000, the greater part of which will go towards the building of a new medical centre for Patna. Patna is an Indian town riddled with TB, dysentery and other plagues; desperately in need of such a centre.

The campaign this year will feature intensive personal canvassing — one canvasser for every twenty students. Progress will be marked up on a giant thermometer outside the SAC building.

As well as the canvassers two special events are being planned to promote the campaign: a skating party for Feb. 11 and the SHARE banquet in the UC men's residence on Feb. 21. The speaker at the banquet will be the High Commissioner to India.

Before and during the campaign Louis Perinbaum will be on the campus to speak about it. The procedure he has followed at other universities is to give a brief talk at the beginning of each regular lecture.

Knox will Battle with Meds For Peaceful Co-existence

"Peaceful Co-existence" will be the topic of a debate in the Medical Common Room tomorrow at 5:00 p.m. as Knox College will debate against Meds in the inter-faculty debating tournaments.

George Ingram of Knox (which will be upholding the resolution — "Peaceful Co-existence is the only solution to the Cold War situation") stated that "the only alternative to peaceful co-existence is to plunge the world into a war from which it could never hope to recover."

However, Jules Harris of Meds said that the designs of Russia leave "no hope for any permanent peaceful solution." Andy Banks, the other Meds debater, thinks that a third force could offer an alternative to peaceful co-existence. He thinks that such a force could "neutralize" both the East and the West.

Welfare Phillips, the second Knox debater, thinks that co-existence offers a hope for a return to "positive stability" and would avoid a Third World War.

WUA Votes $1000 To Renovate JCR

One thousand dollars was voted for the renovation of the Junior Common Room of University College by the Women's Undergraduate Association, yesterday.

The motion which was passed at the open meeting on the WUA read, in part: "That WUA give $1,000 to the JCR on condition that the JCR belong jointly to the women and men of the College, and that the offices of the WUA, if possible, be located in the JCR." It was added that there should be joint representation of men and women on the standing committee.

During the discussion on the renovation of the JCR, and funds to be contributed to this project, it was revealed that the UC Literary and Athletic Society was expected to contribute approximately $3,000. "This is money which has been earmarked on Lit budgets for renovating JCR furniture," Cathie May explained. "Consequently they have built up quite a surplus." It was also revealed that it was hoped to get some money from the Men's Alumni Association, and some from the College itself.

A member of the School of Architecture drew up a tentative plan of what could be done with the JCR, Miss May said. He suggested floor length red curtains, a refinished floor, new and softer lighting arrangements, and the room divided up into sections by removable screens. He also suggested that the Snack Bar be removed, and a counter built out into the middle of the room, so that more people could be served.

The student estimated that approximately $6,000 would be needed for the curtains, the lighting, the floor, the new Snack Bar, and some new furniture. Eaton's and Simpson's are also expected to look over the JCR and submit estimates.

It was reported that while everyone in the College now uses the JCR, it in effect belongs to the men. The standing committee, who is in charge of the JCR, is a sub-committee of the Lit and has no women on it. The profit from the Snack Bar goes towards the depreciation fund, Miss May said.

It was suggested at the meeting that the women should give enough money so that they would have an effective bargaining position when discussing joint direction of the JCR. "We don't want to get kicked out every time the Lit Director feels like it," one member exclaimed. "Especially if our own offices are in there."

At the meeting, the Students' Administrative Council represented

It's A Mess

Scenes like this are the object of a joint campaign by the WUA and the UC Lit to clean up the JCR. It is perhaps because they do not feel the proper pride in their surroundings that these students do not seem particularly perturbed by the litter, so this year's campaign will include renovation as well as clean-up.

UC Lit Campaigns for Cleanup Better Sandwiches in the JCR

A coffee and hot chocolate machine will be installed in the Junior Common Room, it was decided at the meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society Tuesday. The proposal followed the current movement to "clean up the JCR".

It was learned that Hart House could not supply sandwiches for the snack bar. "We are determined to provide better sandwiches in the JCR," said one member.

The year's reports were presented by the various directors. Norman Griesdorf, the Social Director, aroused comment with the presentation of the Brigadoon expenditures. Earl Berger objected that the costs for Brigadoon should have been presented earlier, and that a detailed budget should have been made up.

Griesdorf insisted that Brigadoon would not lose more than the $400 budgeted for it. Total costs as high as $3,500 were provided for, he said.

The nominations for SAC and EAC representatives were held. For the SAC, Harry Malcolmson, Clarke Deller, and Donald Forester were nominated. Bill Smyth became EAC representative by acclamation.

Adult Marriage Topic of Talk At St. Michaels

"Emotional Maturity in Marriage" is the topic of a speech to be given by James M. Courtwright today. It is one of a series of four lectures on Student Life to be held during February at St. Michael's College.

The talk, which will be followed by a question period, will be held in Carr Hall of St. Michael's College at 4.15 today. As part of the Student Life Series, it will be sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council of St. Michael's.

President Doug Burns

By BOB BROWN

Doug Burns is a tall, smiling, brown-haired Albertan whose easy manner of approach and general friendliness explain in part why he was picked for the position that he now occupies—full-time President of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

Doug, who was on this campus for five days at the end of last week, said he had come to Toronto as part of his cross-Canada presidential tour. Despite however much he may have been pleased by Toronto's recent decision to remain in NFCUS at the increased fee level, Doug doesn't think much of the Queen City's weather. He said that as a result of Toronto's cold and dampness, he had gotten a bad case of the sniffles.

And when questioned on Toronto generally, the NFCUS President had this to say: "I must be a confirmed Westerner, because I certainly like the West."

Doug, who is now 25 years old, was born and raised in Edmonton. He attended the University of Alberta there, taking a general three-year course in Arts, (he specialized in Economics, which should come in handy with his troubles over the NFCUS budget), and then went on to attend the Alberta Law School. He would now be in second year if he had not taken a year out to serve as the full-time national head of Canadian University students.

Doug said that he had no idea that he would be elected NFCUS president when he came to the annual NFCUS conference in Toronto last October. Doug did say though, that he thought it commendable that there should be some continuity in NFCUS executive, and that he had served before as Western Regional Vice-President of NFCUS, and as his University's NFCUS head.

When questioned on various controversial matters dealing with NFCUS, Doug said that it was a "bit difficult for him as president" to say anything much about any one Canadian University as he looked at things from the top. Doug also said that he did not want to give the impression of interfering in the activities of any university.

However, the National President did say that Toronto's decision to remain in NFCUS was "what I had expected and hoped for." Burns arrived in Toronto last Wednesday night just in time to hear the "good news". He said that the fifty-cent fee (levied annually per student) had been found essential to finance the NFCUS program. "We have been somewhat restricted by the long time that it has taken to get this program into effect" (the original motion to increase the NFCUS fee was passed at McGill almost two years ago), "but now we can go ahead with our program."

Doug stressed that it was up to each student to contribute to the success of NFCUS. "The students themselves — and not any committee or executive — make up the organization." He also said that the students could only expect "their 50 cents worth from the organization, and no more."

Burns said that he felt that the Canadian University newspapers did not have any bias against NFCUS. He did think, however, that the "bad news" on NFCUS — such as Montreal withdrawing — was given more prominence than the day-to-day "good news" on NFCUS, such as the description of NFCUS services.

Doug said that he also thought that more co-operation between college papers and their local councils would serve the interests of the students better. He said that he did not think that this "closer co-operation" would mean that the paper would lose its independence or freedom.

The National President deplored some of the recent NFCUS squabbles on Canadian camp. He said that a controversy of this nature just served "to confuse the student, especially on the larger camp where there was little personal contact with the NFCUS reps."

Throughout the interview Doug stressed that he would like to hear the average students' opinions on the problems that confront NFCUS. Doug said that he thought that it was unfortunate that the participation of a college in NFCUS activities often depended to a great extent on a small group of people on each campus, and the influence that they could wield over the rest of the student body. He said that one drawback of the NFCUS set-up was that colleges and faculties were only apt to have an interest in NFCUS if the members of their college organization were active NFCUS supporters.

Doug said that "perhaps I expected too much of Toronto — due to its large campus, less can be accomplished here."

Doug also said that another big fault with

... and More Perception

The Editor,
The Varsity.

One of the most important things an education should do for us, is bring us the realization that sweeping generalizations just don't hold water. The very fact that Mr. Van Gelderen feels called upon to condemn the followers of Baha'ism and theosophy as "undesirable", badly adjusted, "social outcasts" in "serious need of psychiatric care", is proof indeed that his mud-slinging has no real basis. Does Mr. Van Gelderen have a true understanding, for instance, of the Baha'i teachings? Is he, therefore, in any position to denounce those who support its ideals and practice its principles?

An historical study of religious or scientific development illustrates the fact that no great and fundamental advance in human knowledge has ever met with initial acceptance by the narrow-minded unimaginative conformist.

Consider the pioneers in any field of human endeavour. They all suffered persecution, rejection and ridicule, but the truth of their discoveries and teachings withstood the light of search and the test of application and so gradually became accepted.

Thus far, experiments in the field of extra-sensory perception have not been occupied with proving the existence of such perception. Is not investigation into this field worthy of merit? For without experiment, how can we ever discover the inherent possibilities of such a science?

Any denial that there are forces operating beyond the sphere of our five senses, is a gross assumption on our part.

True, we must admit that we have very little knowledge of that so called "fourth dimension", but is that reason enough to denounce the existence, in man, of something which transcends the law of matter?

And finally, is Mr. Van Gelderen in any position to set limits upon, or condemn those who independently investigate truth?

Calling Caput

The Editor,
The Varsity.

For obvious reasons, this letter must be signed by a pseudonym. Through it, I specifically charge a group of students with shameful blasphemy. It was with the announcement last week of a debate "Resolved that God is Man's Greatest Mistake" to be held at Trinity College on February 2, in conjunction with representatives of St. Michael's College that the righteous indignation of all self-respecting theists was aroused.

In this perilous hour of irreligiosity and amorality, one is amazed that the students from two nominally Christian colleges could so desecrate the sacred tradition of theism in our culture. What man among us can rise to question the inalienable right of every man to worship, fear and respect the God, he holds to be the true God?

It is imperative that the Caput of this University exercise its powers to protect the rights and dignity of the students of the University when matters so deplorable arise on this campus. May the sneering iconoclasts, who initiated this debate and those who uphold the sacrilegious motion, be prepared to accept the disciplinary action of the Caput! Indignant Theist

Who Cares?

As I was letting down my hair,
I met a babe who didn't care;
We had a ball, oh, quite a fling,
She showed me life, and everything,
Of how to live the whole day through—
Not waste my time just drinking brew.
—She didn't care again today,
I love 'em when they get that way!

Question of Equity

The long-standing controversy between the University of Toronto's Law School and the Ontario legal profession has recently been re-opened by the President in his Annual Report.

The facts of the situation are these: the University of Toronto offers a three-year course in law to those students who already hold one degree — usually a B.A. Upon completion of this three-year course, the Law Society of Upper Canada, the official controller of law education in this province, forces the Toronto Law graduates to spend two more years at Osgoode Hall in order to qualify for the practice of law in this province. Osgoode Hall is the official legal school of the Law Society.

During these final two years at Osgoode Hall, the U. of T. graduate will receive roughly four months of academic training. The rest of the time he will spend being articulated to a practising lawyer — often at very low wages.

Thus the Law students from Toronto must spend five years in legal training to obtain admission to the Bar. During this period, the U. of T. students will receive three and one half years of academic legal training, while the Osgoode Hall students get only two and a half.

In this way the Law Society practises gross discrimination against the U. of T. Law School and its students. In no other province in Canada are there any similar disqualifications against the students of a University Law School. Indeed, any graduate of the U. of T. Law School can obtain admission to the bar in most other provinces in Canada in one year, while it takes two in his native province.

The President, in his report, referred to the recommendations about legal education of the Hon. Mr. Justice I. C. Rand, of the Supreme Court of Canada to the Canadian Bar Association.

The Toronto Law School is the only law school in this province which can satisfy the recommendation of the Hon. Justice Rand that law students should have three unbroken years at a professional school.

Both the President of the University and the Dean of the School of Law seem to hold out some hope that in the near future the Law Society will change its attitude and allow U. of T. Law School graduates to enter the legal profession in this province on the same terms as Osgoode Hall students.

But if the attitude of the Law Society in the past is any indication of their views in the future, it will be a long time before they place the welfare of the legal profession in Ontario above their own selfish interests.

What is needed is that the provincial government, which gave the Law Society its stranglehold on legal education, should now require it to take a more equitable view of Toronto's Law School.

Free Will and Blood

It seems that the SAC has predestined how much blood is to flow on this campus. With a self-assured omniscience the Service Committee has allotted each college a quota of appointments.

We are assured that this quota is neither a minimum nor a maximum limit; nevertheless it is easy under this system to reach any number under the quota and very hard to make arrangements for a greater number of appointments.

Some college representatives have been satisfied as soon as they reached their quota and dropped the matter, leaving many who were willing to give blood with no opportunity. Others have gone to the trouble to solicit a number of pledges over the quota and had the "extra" people turned away. Surely a ridiculous situation, when blood is so badly needed.

Since the giving of blood is a voluntary act, and since there is a nominal competition between the colleges and faculties for the skid cannon, it seems that the SAC might have placed a little faith in free will, by arranging for the supply of appointments to fit the demand.

Canadian National Ballet

Four Acts of Swan Lake

Smith and Adams are common names, but they have taken on a new lustre through the uncommonly good dancing of Lois Smith and David Adams. Their sensitive performances last night in the Canadian National Ballet's full length version of Swan Lake, at the Royal Alexandra, turned what might have been an event of merely historic importance, into an event of artistic importance.

The first act of Swan Lake was characterized by a joie de vivre which kept it from being just a dull introduction. Celia Franca, in the walking part of the Prince's mother made a compelling appearance, proving again her ability as a character dancer. There was some very neat dancing done by the pas de trois of Lillian Jarvis Angela Leigh, and Earl Kraul.

It cannot be said that the dancing of the demanding second act was the epitome of classicality, but the lack of a perfect technique was made up for by enthusiasm. The chorus held their positions fairly uniformly and were certainly a very attractive bunch of swans. The dance of the two swan maidens was not sufficiently strong, it was mainly a result of a need for a little more of things technical. The four cygnets also missed the usual brilliant effect of their dance because their steps were not sharp or clean enough.

In this act, the dancing of Lois Smith proved her distinction as an artist. Her pas de deux with David Adams and her solo dances were quite moving, displaying grace and warmth of feeling. Her line and continuity of movement, as well as the height of her arabesques, has improved immensely since last season. The only criticism I would make is that she moved too quickly to and from positions which broke the repose of her dancing.

It is a pleasure to see a man who can really lift. David Adams' strong partnering always showed Miss Smith to the best advantage. But David Adams does more than partner well. His dancing itself is just as strong. He not only leaps high, but lands without fuss and moves on to the next part. He, more than any of the other dancers in the company has developed a virtuosity along with his interpretive abilities.

The variations of the third act were a bit insipid on the whole. It took the snapping eyes of Lois Smith, this time as Odile, the wicked magician's daughter, to bring some excitement to the scene. Miss Smith managed to be a superbly evil replica of her other self, and here her quickness of movement was a help. When she danced love as Odile, it was a love of chaste longing, but as Odette she danced a calculating and seductive love. The use of lightning at this point and groups of rushing, flustered people gave the scene a more climactic ending than is usual.

The last act, when there is one, always has to face the problem of having the lovers leap into the river and appear in a world of bliss. It seems impossible to do this convincingly on stage, and so the end of the ballet is always rather disappointing.

The sets of Kay Ambrose, were appropriate in structural design, especially that of act three, but were disturbingly blatant and naive in colour. She does better things in costuming.

This is a youthful company, but with a good deal of determination. Their appearance is attractive, and their dancing is vigorous. The technical virtuosity that they are lacking can only come slowly and with great pains.

Smith and Adams

Lois Smith and David Adams who appear as Odile-Odette and Albrecht in the Canadian National Ballet version of the full-length Swan Lake at the Royal Alexandra. Further performances of Swan Lake will take place on Friday evening and Saturday matinee of this week.

Sunday's Music

Last Sunday's Hart House evening recital was given by the very talented violinist Betty-Jean Hagen and pianist Boris Roubakine.

Though her performances were somewhat varied in quality, Miss Hagen nevertheless appeared as a young artist who has developed most of her musical potentialities into masterful violin playing. Apart from her tremendous technical endowments, Miss Hagen's talent is also characterized by a wonderfully rich tone as well as a vigour which enlivens her style with great intensity.

Yet the same vitality applied excessively seemed to intervene with her performance of Mozart. Both the Adagio and Rondo, though finely accented, lacked in tonal contrast.

In Schubert's Duo in A major Miss Hagen's role was obscured by Mr. Roubakine's harsh and angular playing, which resulted in structural disunity. In a work which, as its title suggests, depends on the strict and even interaction of the two performers, each sentence exceeding its structural limitations will upset the musical balance between the instruments. While Schubert conceived the two parts mostly as imitative, these sounded to us somewhat competitive. Miss Hagen, perhaps to fend off the attacks of the piano, was compelled to raise her tone well above the natural range of this duo.

Beethoven's Sonata No. 9 (the "Kreutzer") is an impetuous, striving yet sensitive expression of passion. With the exception of the sedate second movement, the performers have to recreate the dramatic tension by means of the possibly widest range of dynamic potentialities. Sudden contrasts require immediate tonal adjustments to heighten the dramatic qualities, tempi cannot be taken arbitrarily even in meditative parts, because of an all pervading, continuous robust vitality.

Miss Hagen with her dramatic temperament conformed very closely to Beethoven's mighty moods in this sonata. Her expansive, yet soft tone will conjure up the stormiest as well as the most delicate sound qualities. With a most assured technical control, she was able to maintain the essential continuity between the innumerable dynamic transitions which form the dramatic backbone of this sonata. Miss Hagen has also enchanted us with her beautiful melodic line — leading in the second movement of which the last variation was the most sensitive.

For encores Miss Hagen played Paradis' Siciliano and Bloch's Kol Nidre to the applause of an enthusiastic audience.

With the exception of a badly squeaking piano pedal this was an enjoyable evening.

Peaker

The small but receptive audience at Monday's Convocation Hall organ recital by Dr. Charles Peaker, was treated to a fine programme of modern organ music. The opening selection was a set of five variations on an old Flemish carol "Christ Hath A Garden" by the Dutch composer-organist, Peeters. The last four variations are very modern in style; the three parts (one for each hand and one for the pedals) of the second variation being in different keys and rhythms giving a simultaneous contrast in mood which is almost impossible to assimilate on first hearing. It is a most inventive piece which I would have to hear again to judge better its meaning.

A chromatic Study on the Name BACH by the modern American composer Walter Piston followed. It has an impressively sombre power which rises in steps by means of a short repeated rhythmic figure. The performance was excellent. An Aria by Peeters was next — a slow and beautiful piece of small intention very well fulfilled.

Dr. Peaker went back to the golden age of organ composition for his following two pieces, the Andante from Bach's Trio Sonata in E Minor and Handel's Organ Concerto No. 11 in G Minor. Dr. Peaker kept the three parts of the Andante clearly defined by his careful restriction of the particular stops he did but took too great liberties with the fundamental rhythm which tended to break up a piece such as this and to destroy the overall conception. The Concerto is designed by Handel to be a background for intermission conversation during his oratorio and might well be reserved for such purposes.

One of Healey Willan's many honest little organ compositions followed. It is called O Traurigkeit (O darkest woe! Ye tears forth flow) and as usual wonderfully projects the words of its text. Sir Ernest MacMillan's ceremonial march Cortege Academique closed the program. It is a dramatic piece which has an extra large dose of variety for this sort of thing — very good playing again from Dr. Peaker.

Giesecking

A jovial old man walked to the piano last Monday in Masonry Hall to take command of our emotions. Walter Giesecking is both a wizard and savant. His technique is most intricate, yet in its final essence, simple and sublime. Works on which perhaps he spent the greater part of his life have taken the cast and authority of classics in the art of musical interpretation.

This artist transforms the piano into an intricate tonal palette, mixing the colours with the pedals while using his wonderfully coordinated sensitive touch technique as the brush.

It is surprising how well Giesecking applies a basically impressionistic tone technique to the lustres of other ages. With his fortes as in Beethoven's Sonata in C minor Opus 111, he will reproduce all the passionate strength of the composer while most capable to contrast varying intensities with sublime pianos.

Mr. Giesecking's choice of the Partita No. 1 in B flat major was perhaps due to the fine shades inherent in this work. This recognition however appeared perhaps a bit one-sided as it realized itself in Mr. Giesecking's somewhat too refined performance which was a continuous flow of beauty without the classical restraint of phrasing and more expansive dynamics of the Brocue.

Brahms' three intermezzi, in B flat minor, A and C majors, were brought to life by Mr. Giesecking's wonderful "singing" tones sustained by the whole weight of his body.

Ine Chopin Barcarolle in F sharp minor, a very technically involved piece, was played with such a light speed, that it sounded deceptively simple and unproblematical.

Debussy and Ravel with their somewhat sophisticated emotional appeal and whimsical imagery demand a performer who will capture their continuously changing moods with the greatest possible dynamic flexibility. The haunting little Spanish tune in Debussy's Soiree dans Grenade for instance, intruding its impression on various memories, while always new and new images arise increasing and diminishing in intensity, can only be expressed musically by the total exploitation of possible tonal intensities. It is obvious that Giesecking is the most accomplished interpreter of this style.

AISLE SEAT

Courageous Experiment

The revived convention of the public reading in itself is so skeletal a medium as to require the most thoughtful and imaginative of treatment, although it looks, in its lack of accoutrements, deceptively easy. The very fact that there is nothing to distract our attention from the voices of the performers, makes absolutely necessary a beauty not only of individual voices, but of the pattern of the whole.

Failure to achieve this was the great short-coming of the reading of Euripides' Hippolytus presented last night by the U.C. Player's Guild. Two registers were especially favoured by the readers — a shout for emotion and a monotone for everything else. This would have been less disturbing if it had lain only in particular interpretations; as it was, the entire performance was keyed to these two extremes. As for becoming involved in the action, the dull thud with which the Chorus countered every tense and emotional speech on the part of the principals left me with the sensation of riding on a bumpy roller-coaster. Granted that Greek Chorus, especially in Euripides, tend to slow down the action rather than do anything to help it along, but since they are supposed to achieve the effect of drawing the spectators into the action, it seems a mistake on the part of Celia Shacter, who read the Chorus, to deliver its admittedly uninspiring remarks in so flat a tone as to make the excitement of the actors look like a lot of fuss about nothing. After a particularly heart-rending speech by Theseus, for example, delivered by Colin Hamilton with much feeling and very skilful use of his wonderfully pleasant and expressive voice, the jarring return to a mere reader behind a lectern was really destructive of the mood. The Chorus' lack of enthusiasm would have been less devastating, of course, if the actors had been more successful in their building up of emotional tension. Aileen Kamens, who read Aphrodite with great beauty of voice and a wealth of expression as well, appeared, unfortunately, only as a prologue, although she was further effective in her offstage reading of one of the longer choral odes. Charlotte Schragger, whose Phaedra, as tense and anguished as a wounded bird, was a considerable achievement, was in danger of being swamped by Sharon Tobe's Nurse, for the rich and modulated beauty of Miss Tobe's voice and enunciation poured forth in such a smooth stream that they swept away almost all hint of character. On the other side of the scale was Curt Reis' Hippolytus, for Mr. Reis overplayed with an enthusiasm which must have left the original Hippolytus, restrained and prudish as he was, completely breathless.

If, throughout this review I have sounded dissatisfied, it is because I was; but I am not discouraged. And I have levelled such criticisms as I did at the production because I feel that the convention of the public reading is too interesting and fruitful to be taken lightly and because I feel equally strongly that the problem of producing Greek tragedy for modern audiences can and will be solved by just such courageous experiments as this.

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN VOJTECH

It seems a shame that in sport whenever there shows up a good team, it is usually overshadowed by another team which comes up with its best season. Here at the University of Toronto, this situation has come to the fore. In the Intercollegiate Senior Hockey League we have the pace-setting Blues who have been leading the league so long that the other teams have forgotten what it was like to have the Blues with in hailing distance. The Blues are the overshadowed.

The Intermediate Blues are the overshadowed. To date the Baby Blues have won three out of their five games while tying one other. The games that they have won are usually won by large scores. Note the large score posted over Osgoode Hall in a hockey game at Varsity Arena yesterday evening. It was 7-1 and there were few fans on hand to see the Baby Blues win.

Unfortunately, the intermediates are not in a league this year. The league they were in last year folded when OAC dropped out. Queen's were also participants. This year, Queen's were willing to continue with the league but as things turned out, the league folded. We talked with Jack Wheldrake last night and he was all for having the intermediate league re-opened. He also stated that there would be a possibility that Queen's, Western and McGill may enter.

The Western entry would depend on whether or not they get a suitable ice surface in London. It certainly would be great to see the Universities engage in hockey battle as they do in football. It would also provide more interest among the students not only for the senior teams of the schools but for the intermediates as well.

As for the Baby Blues this year, they are content to wander about the countryside playing exhibition games. They are doing quite well and it is also quite certain that the players are gaining valuable experience. With play improving in the senior leagues, the Senior Blues, in order to remain top contenders, need the intermediate league as a proving ground for future talent.

In goal, the Baby Blues have Al Fleming whom Wheldrake terms a cool customer. In front of him on defence Casey and Smith provide a capable duo aided and abetted by Prendergast, late of the championship football Blues. As for the offence, the line of Morrison, Lotocki and Kearney lead the way. For fancy skating mixed with hockey we have the line of Court, a figure skating champion, ably assisted by Rogers and Riley.

Bertram, Borthwick and Naylor have come up from the University of Toronto Schools hockey team of last year and have remained on the same line on the Baby Blues. Mert Wright is the captain of the team, but at the moment he is recuperating from an injury. It would be a shame not to mention all of the players' names but due to space commitments it is impossible. We would like, however, for them to know that the entire University is behind them, even if they don't show up for the games. Good luck and perhaps if there is a league formed next year we'll be able to cheer them on to another Varsity Championship.

SPS, Pre-Meds Deadlocked 0-0

By TOM WILLIAMS

What was billed as an intramural hockey game turned out to be a contest of "hits and misses", yesterday, as Jr. SPS and Pre Med, battled to a bruising scoreless tie.

The hitting was done at the opposing blue lines, with both teams showing a willingness to mix it up. The result was one of the roughest games of the season, with tempers bordering on the boiling point throughout. However, most of the bouncing was of the clean variety, both teams realizing the importance of staying on the ice. Six penalties were handed out in all, four on double sentences.

The missing took place around both goals, as either club blew enough sure scoring chances to win going away. Skule, with a definite edge in the play, also had the dubious honor of missing more opportunities. When they did find the range, they couldn't beat Cecutti in the Pre-Med nets.

The lanky goallending smoothie was at his best, turning aside several "sure" goals, notably on the efforts of the Surtel, Bielawski, Wilson line, who turned in their usual powerful game. On one occasion, Wilson and Bielawski broke into the clear together, only to be foiled by Cecutti who sprawled to block Bielawski's close-in drive.

Germain, in the Engineers' goal, also had his anxious moments, especially when Murdock, who with Cecutti was the best of the doctors, got a clean-cut breakaway. He went right in before shooting, colliding with Germain, who slid out to block the drive.

Both periods saw excellent, end-to-end action, with first one team, then the other putting on powerful drives. In the first, play was even, with the goalkeepers sparking. Three quick penalties, a double to Lee and Worthly for high-sticking, and Hamilton for kneeing, gave Skule a man advantage, but they were unable to muster an organized power-play.

The second period saw the Engineers take a distinct edge, storming around the Doctors' net, and doing everything but score. Surtel almost broke the goose-egg when he grabbed Thompson's rebound with Cecutti out of position. But the goalie somehow managed to get a foot in the way. Shortly after that, Wilson had an open net staring him in the face, but he couldn't find the handle.

Murdock had the best chance for Pre-Med in this period, as in the first, back-handing a loose puck past an open corner, He, Paul and Hamilton were the pick of the Pre-Med forwards, while Lee, who served three of his club's four penalties, did most of their blue line bouncing.

Surtel, Bielawski, and Wilson, with Gray and Wier, were best offensively for Skule. Thompson and especially MacDonald, did the heavy-hitting.

Baby Blues In 7-1 Win Tiny Tom Tallies Twice

By FRED GRAY

Varsity's Intermediate hockey team swung back into the win column yesterday posting a 7-1 triumph over Osgoode. In a game that for the most part lacked the spirit of previous Intermediate engagements the Seconds had little trouble handling their short-handed opponents. On the ice for the first time in four days Varsity never did seem to shift into high gear, missing numerous scoring chances.

Varsity scored twice in the opening period unanswered by Osgoode. Dud Kearney, back in action for the first time since the R.M.C. game, potted the first counter converting Ian Morrison's pass at the 13:10 mark. Barry Smith up on the forward line for the game earned the assist. Bill Naylor tallied the second score for the Intermediates from centre Don Borthwick.

In the second period Varsity still seemed to be unable to organize a consistent attack although adding three more to their total. Ted Rogers scored first from line-mate Doug Court followed by Osgoode's only goal of the afternoon. Church dropped the puck behind Al Fleming in the Varsity net, Dale earning credit for the assist. Varsity was back in a scoring way less than three minutes later as Tom Riley from Ted Rogers provided the talent. Defenceman Herb Tilson pounced on Barry Smith's rebound to hammer Varsity's final score of the period past the Legalite's goal-tender.

The Seconds swarmed over the tiring Osgoode team in the final twenty minutes but seemed to lack the pay-off punch around the net as they were only able to add two of their mounting total. Converted defenceman Bamy Smith collected his third point of the evening as he fired the club's and Dud Kearney. Tom Riley was back at 10:35 to finish the Intermediate's scoring parade with his second of the game from Doug Court and Chuck Bull.

For a pleasant change yesterday's game was not continuously stilled by a ponderous penalty parade, both terms receiving the seventh goal from Ian Morrison official nod only on three occasions. Diminished Tom Riley led the Intermediate goal producers with his first and second of the season, while Barry Smith was top man in total points registering a goal and two assists. Although not figuring in the scoring, forward Ron Bertram showed plenty of hustle both ways in the win.

St. Mike's Beats UC 53-30 Irish C's Fall To SPS VI

By MAX ROSENTHAL

As intramural basketball has reached its mid-point, many people have begun to predict the finalists for the Sifton Cup, the symbolic of supremacy in the hoop loop. Of the many teams contending in the major league, St. Mike's A, Junior SPS, and Law A have emerged as favorites.

Yesterday, the St. Mike's team vindicated their strong rating by decisively beating Senior U.C., 53-30, thus claiming their fourth consecutive victory. The win boosted the Irish to a high point advantage over the other teams in Group 1. In other action yesterday, SPS VI trounced St. Mike's C team, 48-34. On Monday Law A easily mastered Trinity A, 45-21. Earlier the same day, Senior Vic, also a strong contender for the playoffs, edged SPS IV, 45-44.

Yesterday's contest between St. Mike's A and Senior U.C. appeared a completely one-sided affair. The Irish, fielding a quintet of dead-eyes, even rated the notice of Bob Masterson, a not too frequent visitor at late afternoon games.

Both teams employed zone variations, with St. Mike's being able to penetrate the U.C. zone by virtue of their uncanny set shot accuracy, and their defensive rebound control.

The leading scorer of the St. Mike's squad was John Sheppard, with thirteen points, whose only task was to stand under the U.C. basket, waiting for the pass from one of his team-mates once the U.C. defence was sucked out of position. Whenever the U.C. men relaxed defensively, the St. Mike's guards hooped from outside with relative ease. Several of the St. Mike's players had a sufficient opportunity to display their talents. Dave Primeau, John Lychy, Dan Driscoll, each scored six points.

For U.C., high men were Bill McVicar with six, Harry Wilson with five, and George Patterson with four.

In the SPS VI's victory over St. Mike's C's, Igor Granovsky led the Skulenum with 19 points. Mo Rotmann was Skule's other leader with thirteen points. For St. Mike's, Bill Doud and Ed Iglar were the leaders with ten each.

On Monday, in a game that saw the lead change hands on several occasions, Ray Atkin with thirteen, and Pete Watson with 12 led the Senior Vic team to their win over SPS IV. For the losers, John Bodrug had eight. In Law's game with Trinity, Ed Luck and Herb Solway were high for Law with twelve each. Trinity's high scorer was Breck Milton with eight.

Girls' Volleyball Team Selected

The Intercollegiate volleyball team was chosen last Thursday night. The girls have been practising now for several weeks in preparation for the Intercollegiate tournament, February 11 and 12. This year the team is being coached by Miss Jackson of the Phys. Ed. department and Sylvia Kerr of II Phys. Ed.

Three girls are back from last year's team. They are Grace Robinson, Doreen Toland and Helene Weisman. Although all the other girls are new to intercollegiate volleyball, most have had quite a bit of playing experience with other teams, so this year's aggregation should fare pretty well. At the tournament last year, Toronto finished in a second place tie behind Western. We're hoping for better things this year.

POT Girls Win Beat PHE's 2-1

At noon yesterday, two of the better teams in the women's hockey league faced off at Varsity Arena, as P.H.E. I took on P.O.T. I.

The game started fast, both teams skating hard and checking closely. Midway through the first period, Sonny Axsmith slid one into the Pot's goal to make it 1-0 for the Ph-Eders.

In the second period, Betty Payette, one of the best players in the league, came right back to tie the score. Thus it remained until late in the third period, when Sandy Weber's shot deflected off a skate and slipped into the net, making it 2-1 for Pots. There the score stayed, despite a last minute rush by P.H.E. who took their goalie out, and used five forwards.

Blues Play Nortown Tonite In Prep Game for Queens

A rematch between the Varsity Blues and the Nortown Basketball organization is set for the St. Michael's College Gym on Bathurst Street tonight at 7 o'clock. Beaten by the Nortowns in their first game, long time back in the fall, the Blues come up this time in a warmup match for their weekend meeting with the Golden Gaels of Queen's University. Only two points made up the Nortown margin in that first game, but the Blues were without such top men as George Stulac.

In their most recent game, the Blues were well-beaten by Jumping Jimmy Horne and the University of Buffalo Bulls. Their record in official League play, thus far, is a perfect one, counting two victories over McMaster Marauders in the past three weeks. The Baby Blues, whose record this year is near perfect, meet the Nortown 88's in the preliminary game. Big question mark in this game, played on the large St. Mike's court, is whether the Blues can come back up to the form they lost in the Buffalo game last week. The Queen's club they are to meet on the weekend, has proven itself capable of some surprising developments in beating the Assumption Purple Raiders and later in beating the flash-in-the-pan McGill Redmen. Rated as one of the League's dark horse teams this year, they could be dangerous. The best indication of the Varsity chances will be given by their showing in the Nortown game.

Golden Gaels Here Saturday

The student's ravaged pocketbook gets another good break this weekend with activity at home for both Blue hockey and basketball teams. Admission is, as usual, gained by an ATL card to Friday's hockey game with Laval, while for the minimum fee of fifty cents, one can see the Cagemen tangle with the Queens Golden Gaels at Saturday's Athletic Night. Included on the double gage bill will be a swimming meet with Brockport, as well as the challenge round for the Blue boxing team, when the Interfaculty champions pit their strength against the Varsity Senior team.

Basketball Gals Chalk Up Double Win Over Hamilton

Ryerson gym was the scene, on Monday evening, of a double victory for the Intercollegiate and Intermediate basketball squads over McMaster. The senior gals downed their opponents, 41-24, and the Baby Blues edged the junior Macs by a 11-10 count. The senior tilt was an exhibition of Girl's Basketball at its best. Sharp-shooting, effective defense, and accurate passing were displayed by both teams. The Blues got off to a fast start with six unanswered points by speedy Pat Swayze. The Mac forwards soon got into stride with counters by Jane Wolston and Ev Macaluso. The second quarter featured a display of scoring power by Toronto, headed by Sue McLaughlin, Mary Winslip, and "never-miss" Sally Wallace. Hamilton fought back with some dead-eye free throws by Macaluso and Jane Wolston. The half-time score read 27-16 for the Blues.

Despite their comfortable lead, the Toronto marksmen continued to put on the pressure with baskets by Wallace, Swayze, Clare McMullen, and June Hansford. McMaster kept pace with points by Wolston and Barb Jarrett. The fourth and final quarter saw both squads tighten their defenses. Gwen Anne Miller, Lou Martin, and Audrey Lamb held the Mac forwards well in check, while Nancy MacDougall, Donna Weir, and Donna Clarke did the same for the Hamilton squad.

Ev Macaluso of the visiting sextet was high-scorer for the evening with fourteen points; Sally Wallace topped the Toronto forwards with eleven. June Hansford again showed her versatility, being effective both on offense and defense.

The Junior game was faster and more exciting than the low score might indicate. Both teams seemed to lack solid scoring plays, but made up for it with fine passing and defensive displays. The Baby Blues, led by Lillian Bobson, held the Mac attackers in the second half to within two points of a victory, only to be thwarted by the final whistle.

Both Toronto squads will see action next Monday evening at Ryerson. The Intermediates will face the junior Ryerson squad at 7:00 p.m., while the seniors will take on Hamilton Normal School at 8:00 p.m.

The Queens Gaels, currently tied for second place in the Intercollegiate Union with the Blues, have two wins in four starts, and boast a well-balanced club lead by 6' 3" centre Paul Fedor who has a four-game average of twenty-one points. Add to these Bob Purcell, Frank Donnelly, and Jay McMahon, and the Blues will have a rough game on their hands. John McManus' Baby Blue eagles face the Queens Seconds in the preliminary game at 7:00.

Friday night in Varsity Arena the Hockey Blues clash with the cellar dwelling Red and Gold of Laval. Winless in seven games, the Lavalians might be hard to handle. They have a strong club and are just about due.

For this encounter Coach Jack Kennedy will reshuffle his third line, putting defenceman John Tolton at left wing, with Ernie Bodnar at centre and Johnny Adams moved to right wing. Production by the third line has not quite equalled that of the other two, and the change is an effort to obtain a well-balanced attack for insurance in the home stretch of the Queens Cup race.

Pride of the Laval offence is lanky centre Robert Lafreniere, now just one point short of third place. Clare Fisher in the Intercollegiate scoring race. Although held to two points against the Carabins last Friday night, the Blues' big first line is still holding down the first three spots in the race.

Friday Is Deadline For Student Seats For Traviata, Figaro and Fledermaus

Friday is the last day for ordering your tickets for the Opera Festival. Students and staff of the university can obtain preferred seats for the Festival by ordering

NFCUS was its lack of continuity. New officers are elected every year to fill the NFCUS posts, and most of these have only limited experience with NFCUS.

Doug had just completed a ten-thousand mile tour of colleges in the West and in Ontario. He is now back in Ottawa, where he will remain, for a week cleaning up his paper work before moving on to the East for a tour of the Maritimes and Quebec.

And throughout his lengthy tour of Canada, Doug Burns will continue to tell all students that he meets of the tremendous possibilities of the National Student Federation which he heads.

their tickets early through SAC representatives and the SAC office.

Three popular operas will be presented in this sixth annual Opera Festival. Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" is the opening production on Feb. 25th, International Night of the festival is Feb. 26th, with the presentation of "Marriage of Figaro". This night is expected to be of interest to the overseas students of the university because members of the Consular Corps will be in attendance. The third opera is "La Traviata". This will be sung in Italian and conducted by Maestro Ernesto Barbin.

"La Traviata" is new in the company's repertoire and the exacting role of Violetta will be alternated between Marcella Reale and Patricia Snell. Other artists include James Milligan and Jon Vickers. Mary Morrison will appear as the Countess of Figaro, along with Roma Butler and Jean Edwards. Don Garrard and Jean Ramsay are members of the cast for "Die Fledermaus", which, with the "Marriage of Figaro", will be sung in English.

It has been requested that all new orders for tickets be mailed to Mrs. D. Pratt, 2 Lynwood, Toronto, in order that preferred seats be assured the students and staff of the university.

tative reported that agitation was under way to keep the Library open till 11:00 p.m. "An open letter from the SAC was sent to The Varsity and to Mr. Blackburn," she said. "We hope to get letters from individual colleges and faculties also to The Varsity, complaining of the inadequate service. This will give the SAC something to talk about," she explained.

It was also reported that UC was in the finals of the UTDU debates, that tickets for the Art's Ball were going better, that students could give blood any time this week, and that although Forestry won the Winter Carnival contest (with UC coming third), a UC man beat a Wood-chopper at wood-chopping.

McMaster: The McMaster debating team has won its first round in the NFCUS Debating Trials. Winner will be sent to Europe to represent Canada this summer with transportation provided by NFCUS, plus a hundred dollars thrown in to cover part of the expenses.

Last Monday the Mac team defeated Toronto debaters Margaret Riches and Peter Martin. The second round of the round-robin series saw Moishe Reiter and The Varsity's chief, Clyde Batten, take a tie on the topic: Resolved that Canada is a satellite of the U.S.A.

Manitoba: Students here were given a double shof of culture when in one week an exhibition of the paintings and sculpture of Matisse plus a concert by Artur Rubinstein were on hand.

Just in case anyone thinks Varsity reviewers are overly vicious, we include excerpts from the Manitoban review of Rubinstein's concert: "Mr. Rubinstein opened with a disappointing performance . . . the other movements were equally unsuccessful . . . the only unusual feature of an otherwise hackneyed program . . . played far too heavily . . . lacked subtlety . . . it would be even more difficult to imagine why he chose to play this old war horse . . . spoiled by wayward tempo and bad pedaling, and the finale was a fantastic middle of sound."

We were at last encouraged to see that the IUS World News Service reprinted one of the jokes we stole from the Saskatchewan Sheaf and sent it across the world.

And here's more from The Sheaf.

First Scot: 'Ave ye a match, Mac?

Mac: Aye, 'Ere's one.

First Scot: (Feeling in his pockets) Ah, I'm oot o' cigarettes.

Mac: Then ye'll no be needin' the match.

Prof: Tell me all you know about Keats.

Student: I don't know anything. In fact I don't even know what they are.

British East Africa: Indians in British East Africa have donated $380,000 for the establishment of the Gandhi Memorial College in that country. The college will be open to students of all races and creeds. It will be the only institution of its kind for African students, according to a publication of the Indian Embassy in Washington.

Debaters OK Deity To Avoid Confusion

Another chapter has undoubtedly been added to the history of debating at this University.

After the speakers for the government had crossed to the side of the opposition, the House of the Trinity-St. Michael's debate decided that God is not Man's greatest mistake by a 71-52 vote.

This move, unprecedented in debating annals of the University, was made "to save the vote of this debate from misinterpretation."

In the closing words of a lively debate, John Schonleber, IV St. Michael's and first speaker of the government, said in rebuttal, "The government will sacrifice its vote, and cross to the side of the opposition, in order that the feeble minds of the irreligious of this university may not be confused."

Among the incidents of the evening was the intrusion of the Hart House Glee Club, who dropped in to serenade the debaters in the course of a tour of the campus which included the women's residences, the President's house, and the K.C.R. Quite appropriate to the "interment of the Deity" that was in progress, the choristers included "Salvation Is From Our God" among their selections.

Choosing a "finer interpretation" of the resolution, John Schonleber, the first speaker of the government, claimed that in its true meaning it was "What is the greatest possible mistake a man could make — woman? The establishment of Trinity College?" Rather than these, Schonleber suggested, it was "a misconception of the Supreme Deity, Who has not only made man but sustains him in existence."

"We create our own worlds; we deny what really is," claimed Schonleber. Comparing us to the spider in making his world, he said that "day in and day out we are getting our own gods, and they are raising hell with our lives."

Rather than the modern gods of Russell, Heidegger and Sartre, Schonleber advocated a return "to the God of Abraham and Jacob, to the one true God Who always was and always will be."

James Daly, IV St. Michael's and first speaker of the opposition, said that "Man has been charged with great injustices; now he wishes to add to his misdemeanors, God Himself."

Citing the labour unions, Daly pointed out that the five-day week was an innovation; previous centuries had managed on one day of rest, "thanks to that much-maligned fellow, God."

Daly drew upon a Puritan quotation — "When it is not necessary to change, it is necessary not to change" — and called for a renewed respect for "the rule of right, the symmetry of virtue, and the remembrance of things past."

Barry Watson, the second speaker for the government, claimed that "Man's greatest problem is to discover his relation to the universe and the Force that governs it."

Watson pointed out that any debate on the existence of God is a futile one: "He either exists, or He doesn't — the issue is already decided. Arguments will only prove that if you really want to believe in something, you can think of the craziest reasons for doing so."

Watson said that of all the many religions of the world, each has a certain degree of validity, and each man has his own conception of God. "Even the best religion is not perfect," said Watson. "Each treads one of the many paths to salvation, not the least crooked of which is Christianity."

Charles Mark, IV Trinity and second speaker for the opposition, condemned the "rose-water humanitarianism" of the government, and spoke at some length on what he termed the "biological passage" of the Bible, and a Latin quotation that had clear reference to indoor plumbing.

When brought to a hasty close, Mark quoted:

"King David and King Solomon led merry, merry lives

With many many lady friends and many wives.

But old age crept over them with many many qualms:

King Solomon wrote Proverbs, and King David wrote the Psalms."

One Year Waste of Time OCE Debaters Declare

"A year at the Ontario College of Education is a waste of time."

This was the conclusion reached by an audience of O.C.E. students yesterday who voted 42-41 in favor of the affirmative in a debate which had as its topic "Resolved that Year at O.C.E. is a Waste of Time." The winning team included John Antrobus and Jean Taylor, while the losers of the close decision were Gwen Hasselfield and Hugh McKellar.

Affirmative speaker Antrobus led off by asking why most students accomplish less at O.C.E. than in their senior year at college. He criticized a system which places in the same lecture courses students with a wide diversity of backgrounds. Especially in the philosophy and psychology classes, the teaching had to move at a beginners' level, resulting in boredom for students who had taken advanced study in these fields at University, he stated.

Miss Taylor followed up by quoting letters written by students in teacher-training colleges, expressing their disgust at the small amount of work covered and the low value placed on scholarships. She contrasted the apathetic attitude of students in the College with the interest exhibited in actual classroom teaching.

Miss Hasselfield, speaking for the negative, explained how the weeks of practice teaching and lectures was designed to help students correct their mistakes in teaching as speedily and effectively as possible.

Second speaker McKellar suggested that if the students' time was wasted at O.C.E., it was apt to be the fault of the students rather than the college's. He felt that no college could help a student who didn't feel the need of taking advantage of opportunities offered to him.

Toronto Swamps Our Campus President's Report Reveals

Over half — 56% — of the U. of T.'s students come from Toronto, the Annual Report of the President revealed. The Report also showed that 35% of this University's students come from the rest of Ontario outside of the Queen City.

Thus 91% of the students (or 10,048 out of 11,127 enrolled) in grad and undergrad courses come from Ontario.

The 9% remaining of the U. of T.'s students come from Canada's other 9 provinces and from 60 foreign countries.

Among other things, the Report showed that Toronto has far more students from the U.S.A. (187) than from any other Canadian Province except Ontario (Quebec is the next largest with 119).

About half the students from the U.S.A. are shown to be concentrated in St. Mike's, where over 16% of the student body is American.

The report shows that a surprising 115 students from Saskatchewan are at Toronto.

The U. of T.'s graduate School is shown to be the course that attracts students from farthest away. Grad Studies has a higher percentage (30%) of students from outside Ontario, than any other college or faculty.

The Faculty of Pharmacy, on the other hand, has only 2% of its students coming from homes outside the province.

Rev. Dr. P. Dawley On Sunday In HH

The Reverend Dr. Powell Mills Dawley, professor of Ecclesiastical History at the General Seminary of New York City, will speak at the Fifth University Church Service. The Service will be held in the Great Hall of Hart House at 11 a.m. this Sunday.

Rev. Dr. Dawley is the author of many important books dealing with the Church of England, and is a recognized authority on the liturgical tradition of the book of common prayer.

He has served on executive commissions in the World Council of Churches, and is now also sub-dean of the General Seminary.

Previous speakers in the series have included such people as Bishop Nygren of Lund, Sweden; Rabbi William Braude of Providence, Rhode Island; and Dr. Paul Lehman of Princeton University.

Ian Scott

By AL TOUGH

"My two main fields of action are St. Mike's and Hart House," said Ian Scott, publications commissioner of the Student's Administrative Council. He is president at St. Mike's where he is in fourth year Modern History, and is on the Debates Committee at Hart House. As well as debating a great deal he has been chairman of SHARE and has been in charge of the Indian Sale.

Scott's friends say he enjoys these activities because "he loves talking, making speeches and sounding off." They also say, that although very young both in age and appearance, he is mature, very diplomatic, affable and cheerful.

"A public relations job" was Scott's description of his position as SAC publications commissioner. "I act as intermediary between the SAC and the Varsity and Torontonensis. I make sure the Varsity is aware of its responsibility towards the students, who have many sound ideas on newspapers, especially their own paper. I've enjoyed it on SAC this year, keeping track of Joe Slogon and Michael Oliver and other critics of the Varsity". Scott is pleased that "we've had no real blow-ups this year."

Ian Scott is in Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, and in the University Naval Training Division (UNTD). He gets his commission this May. His last two summers were spent on the east and west coasts. He is proud that "I didn't get seasick; not very much anyway."

From Ottawa, his home, Scott came to this university in spite of the fact that "Toronto is not a very popular university as far as Ottawa is concerned. I was the only one in my class (at Ashbury College) to come to U or T." He believes his course, Modern History, is "the best course for a broad liberal education." He enjoys St. Mike's because "it is united — everyone knows everyone else." After a year in Quebec City to learn French, Scott will return to Toronto and probably become a lawyer (eventually).

Dr. Moser

Dr. John Moser, Professor of Radiology on the Faculty of Dentistry, died in Chattanooga, Tenn., while on a holiday trip with his wife.

Dr. Moser had practiced his profession for fourteen years in Toronto, and was a graduate of the U. of T. in 1930. He is survived by his wife and two children.

Western Girl Repeats Win Art Display Leaves Today

For the second year in a row, top honors in the second annual NFCUS Art Competition were given to Miss Heather Spears of the University of British Columbia. She won both the Oils and Drawings awards in the amateur class, while first place in the watercolor division went to J. A. Collyer of Western.

Judging took place on Sunday, and the young Canadian artist Jack Nichols chose the landscape of Miss Carol Bleackly of Mount Allison as the best oil in the Fine Arts class. First places in the Fine Arts watercolors and drawings and prints competition were captured by Miss Doris Livingston, Alberta, and Valli Sumo of Manitoba, respectively.

The competition, which officially opened on Monday, is under the auspices of NFCUS, and represents a cross-section of Canadian art. Sixteen universities across Canada have entered 105 canvases and these have been on display in the Debating Room of Hart House all this week.

Peter Lewis, III Trinity, who organized and supervised the showing, said, "From here, the paintings will go to Western, and, in the course of their tour, will be exhibited at various points across the country. They will probably end up at Banff, where they may remain for the summer months in the Alberta School of Fine Arts.

The exhibition ends today, however H.H. members can view the pictures until 12 noon.

Last Chance Now To Order Tickets Opera Festival

Today is your last chance to obtain advance tickets for the Opera Festival. The sixth Opera Festival opens at the Royal Alexandra Theatre Feb. 25th, and will continue until March 12th. Students and staff of the University can obtain preferred seats in this advance sale of tickets, by getting order forms from the SAC office, or from their SAC representatives.

The three operas to be presented in this festival are La Traviata, Die Fledermaus, and Marriage of Figaro. Strauss' Die Fledermaus will open the series. This and Marriage of Figaro are to be sung in English and conducted by Nicholas Goldschmidt. Herman Geiger-Torel has done the distinctive stage direction for the productions.

It has been requested that all orders for tickets be sent to Mrs. D. Pratt, 2 Lynwood, Toronto.

Students 'Unbloody' Still Quota Needs 900 Pints

It still isn't too late to give a pint of blood to the Red Cross.

This was the word today from Barbara Flint, the Chairman of the university's student Blood Blitz committee. Miss Flint said that although the campaign was due to wind up today, officials had decided to extend it two days next week and two days the week following.

Student blood campaign backers are seeking a total 1,920 pints from University of Toronto students.

So far, they have collected about 1,050 pints out of a quota of 1,920.

Last year's donations to Red Cross blood banks, Miss Flint said, totalled 1,140 pints. She said she was optimistic about bettering the figure this year.

"We already have 1,050 pints which we collected this past week," Miss Flint said, "and I think we will easily get more than 100 pints over the next two weeks."

Asked what procedure one should take in order to donate blood, Miss Flint said, "Just go down to the old Sick Children's hospital at the corner of College and Elizabeth streets." (A table of times is to be found in this article).

If groups of more than five go down together, Miss Flint said, in order to increase their quotas, they should follow these instructions:

1. Go to the telephone. Dial WA. 3-6692 any day up to 5 p.m.
2. Ask for Miss Miles.
3. Make an appointment.

Students may also go anytime today — without appointments — to the School of Nursing on St. George St.

The faculty which attains the highest percentage of the quota mark will be awarded the Skule Cannon trophy, emblematic of Blood supremacy. The trophy is currently held by the Faculty of Forestry. It was won in competition two years ago, and not competed for last year, Miss Flint said.

The trophy, she said, would be awarded at the end of the month.

Peace Only Solution Is 'Formally' Resolved At Knox-Meds Debate

The resolution "Peaceful Co-existence is the Only Solution to the present Cold War Situation" was upheld yesterday by a 12-11 vote of Knox and Meds.

This was the first debate ever held in the Medical Common Room. Attire was strictly formal for the occasion, including that of the judges, whose outfits included white coats and stethoscopes.

George Ingram, of Knox, speaking for the government, stated that recognition of Red China by the U.S. is necessary for peaceful co-existence, since negotiation follows recognition. "We must have something with which to bargain — we must remain strong and united."

Speaker for the opposition, Jules Harris, argued that peaceful co-existence is characterized by friendly international relations. He pointed out that such relations cannot exist between Russia and the U.S., since one of the basic tenets of communism is the overthrow of capitalism.

Arguing in favor of peaceful co-existence, Neville Phillips said "I do not know what they will use in the third World War, but I do know what they will use in the fourth, Stones."

Final speaker for the opposition, Andy Baines, stated that since the tension between communism and capitalism results from the fact that the two ideologies are basically opposed, a third ideology would reduce the difference between the two. He named Catholicism as a possible solution, since it alone "has a unity which could equal that of communism."

Coffee, Anyone

"A cup of coffee" is translated into Brazilian Portuguese by saying "basic economy", for each minute change in the price of coffee has a significant effect in Brazil. This was the story told at the F.R.O.S. discussion group by Alberto Cruz, a Brazilian who is spending a year visiting Canada.

Brazil is a country of jungle and large cities, of desert and rum-drinking Indians, a blend of the ultra-modern and the primitive, he said.

"There is very little communication between South American countries and there is no feeling of continental unity" said Walter Knapp, a civilian engineering student from Brazil, now doing graduate work on the campus. "However, if he speaks Spanish or Portuguese," said Alberto Cruz, "up here, he is my friend."

SMC Studes Hear Cortright 'Emotional Maturity'--Topic

A discussion of "Emotional Maturity in Marriage" by James R. Cortright, opened the annual Student Life Series, sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council of St. Michael's College.

Mr. Cortright treated the subject of marital maturity in three different spheres—business, family and society. He said that it could be summed up with "dedicated selfishness" and a proper balance of the different aspects of life, with its true goals in mind.

Life in the world is not parallel to university living, according to Mr. Cortright. For the graduate, there is a difficult adjustment to the development of mature responsibilities — a transition from university, to single life in the world, to marriage. Marriage provides "the most opportunity for maturing".

Education, in its formal sense, has "a great deal to say about the formation of emotional maturity". But chronological age is no factor. "And there is no substitute for hard work".

For women, Mr. Cortright claims there is no career "so varied, so all-inclusive, and so genuinely satisfying" as that of a wife. "There is no place for emotional immaturity in marriage."

Montreal: Two political camps are forming on the McGill campus, fighting the pros and cons of abandoning NFCUS by the students' society.

It is rumoured around McGill that a scheduled meeting of the Students' society was carefully avoided by executive members resulting in a more organized anti-NFCUS camp.

It is expected that some light will be shed on the controversy at the Quebec Regional NFCUS conference to be held at Sir George Williams College February 26 and 27.

The Social Credit government of British Columbia has announced a ten year, ten million dollar building program at the University of British Columbia. It is expected an arts building will be given priority, although a science building and a men's residence will also be given consideration. Construction "in terms of brick and mortar" may begin this year.

The announcement came almost simultaneously with a talk by the chief curator of the National Art Gallery of Canada who says that British Columbia architecture is the "most advanced" in Canada.

Saskatchewan U. is apparently not so fortunate. A recent editorial in The Sheaf complains that the new union building on their campus is a five hundred thousand dollar lemon. The editorial claims that the new building will serve the needs of the university "about as well as a two headed student council president."

Gullible Traveller

Now that our Catholic friends, Anglo or Roman, have proven that God is not man's greatest mistake, it only remains for us to decide what is.

Some interesting speculation on the possibility of women qualifying for that honour has been entertained, but not too successfully. Most people would prefer to put women in the category of captivating appendages. Some honour them with cavalier attention.

Many people hold that man's greatest mistake is an unparalleled consumption of alcoholic beverage. However, so many people lead lives of such unrelieved boredom, that the minor titillation of beer and spirits can prove but small solace.

What then of sexual promiscuity? So few people can participate in this form of social behaviour with any degree of abandonment that it can scarcely be classed as a great mistake. Besides which, Victorian hangovers prevent most people from looking upon sexual activity with any but the most sinister of disapproving faces. As long as these people remain in the majority, as they are in Ontario and other infected areas of society, it is unlikely that promiscuity will ever graduate to the level of a first class mistake. It will inevitably be something slightly thirdish.

Surely pride must be at least a ranking mistake on the part of man. While it is true that pride was once a cardinal vice, it has now become much too expensive even for cardinals and a general overlay of Freudian pap has reduced most men's pride to a poor, simpering thing at best.

Guttony, avarice and others of the college of vices and mistakes, have with the help of Hollywood and Holyrood, been reduced to mere shadows of their former glory.

It appears that in very truth we have not one robust, healthy, strong-backed mistake left in our calendar. This surely must be a great pity although it might be construed as a victory for the forces of righteousness. But what pitiable objects these forces are as they wage their Lilliputian wars against such Lilliputian vices

No Condemnation

It is to the credit of students at this university that the possible fate of the Hart House Orchestra has interested many of them in the formation of an organization to promote the efforts of the Orchestra.

In an editorial on January 19 reference was made to the problems facing Dr. Boyd Neel in the organization of an orchestra of competence. Our suggestion that a series of concerts be organized has been adopted by this new committee. In addition they are planning a preliminary season for the spring term of 1955.

As great a condemnation as it would have been to do nothing about the fate of the orchestra, it would be an ever greater disgrace to let the efforts of these students go unrewarded.

There can be no doubt that this campus is in dire need of an effective and acceptable musical life of high calibre. The chance to have such an addition to the university is in our hands.

We believe that your expression of faith both in the orchestra and those students who have undertaken this preliminary organization, will be amply rewarded.

We recommend the Hart House Orchestra Associates to you.

The International Press

(The following is an extract from the report of the editor of The Varsity to the Canadian University Press on his trip to Moscow and the council of the International Union of Students.)

It is our conviction that the university paper is unique in that it reflects the recurring vitality of the university community. It is further privileged in that it provides a forum for that most controversial and incisive of human expression, mature student opinion. It is still further privileged in that it is free from all external pressures. However, we must recognize that these privileges entail very real responsibilities. The student newspaper must be accurate and show evidence of thorough investigation of the facts. It must repudiate all semblance of bias or prejudice, for the truth is the greatest of all liberators.

On these two major points our organization has been unable to agree with the Press and Information Department of the I.U.S. It is obvious that in so many cases we simply do not see eye to eye. Many of the catchwords employed in their periodicals — peace, freedom, democracy are not subject to the same definition as we are accustomed to attach to them. These catchwords are distasteful to us in those connotations and upon them and in their interpretation we experience the widest possible divergence.

Intervention of The Editor of the Varsity

However, we have noted the change in the nature of the publications of the I.U.S., — a change which is so great that the editorial board of I.U.S. felt compelled to comment upon it and to call it an improvement. To expect fundamental changes in the attitude of Canadian students and editors on the basis of so transitory an improvement, particularly after so many years of intense mistrust and bitter suspicion, is nothing short of arrant pipedreaming.

In 1953, Mr. Charles Taylor sat on the press commission of the council which met in Warsaw. He made a suggestion that material for I.U.S. publications should be solicited directly from the countries concerned. This was done because of the unfortunate experiences we have had with articles appearing in these publications. At Toronto we had a person who was submitting articles to the Press and Information Department which purported to present the viewpoint of the students of Canada. These articles were written by the leader of the Communist club on the campus. It was toward this type of incident that the suggestion of Mr. Taylor was directed.

Following that and the presentation of the Taylor Report at the next NFCUS conference, NFCUS passed a motion to the effect that the C.U.P. should send clippings and papers to the I.U.S. According to the report of the P.I.D. they are receiving Le Carabin, McGill Daily, Varsity and the Saskatchewan Sheaf. This is certainly a representative cross-section of student opinion in Canada.

I closed my intervention by pointing out that a student press blinded by the prejudices arising from within is as much of a travesty on the profession of journalism as that hampered by political and social pressures from the exterior. To us in Canada, the publications of the I.U.S. have been clearly that. We regret that they are either unable or unwilling to perceive it. We do welcome what little change we have been able to discern and we trust that it augurs well for the future. In conclusion I cited that NFCUS Declaration of Student Rights and Responsibilities, which points out that it is the responsibility of every student to seek, publish and discuss, — the truth. I reminded them of the words of Socrates, echoed by one Jesus of Nazareth and later by the excommunicated Jew, Spinoza, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free".

Conscious as we are of these aspects of I.U.S. publications which seem to us to be less than accurate and objective, let us also be aware of those areas wherein our attitude towards them has been at fault. There can be no doubt that the I.U.S. is Communist in principle and practice. However, it represents a very significant portion of the student population of the world. It is, I believe, imperative that our viewpoints and way of life should be accurately represented in their press and that theirs should be accurately presented in ours.

our readers write:

Sheaf Humour Surpassed

The Angry Epistle, from an Indignant Theist, set a new high in humour in the "Our Readers Write" column. In fact, this column is becoming funnier than SHEAF.

What pomposity! What righteous indignation! No wonder he (she, it?) used a pseudonym.

Suspicious

The Editor,
The Varsity . . .

I cannot escape the suspicion that the anonymous shouter of "Blasphemy!" signing himself "Indignant Theist" is really an atheist, trying to discredit religion by underhand means. I suspect this because no accredited present day religion is guilty of defending its own "right to worship, fear and respect the God it holds to be the true God," by forcibly depriving others of their right not to. No religion for many years has been so small minded as to consider honest doubt an offense punishable by law. No religion has so little faith in its God that it considers Him incapable of handling his own discipline, at least in cases of crimethink.

"Theist", old man, I feel, as you probably do, that God is a more or less serious mistake, that energy is better spent on seeking truth than on defending faith, and that a man has enough troubles without the ones of supporting a set of assumptions that can't support themselves. However, let us remember that tolerance is an agnostic virtue, and, if we do feel led to destroy religion with the other delusions men labour under, let us do it by fair and honest means.

— Dignant Nontheist.

Why is it always a Christian who, in the name of "freedom of worship", appeals to the powers—that be to suppress those who disagree with him? Surely freedom of worship also includes freedom not to worship. Or are Christians so afraid for the future of their religion, that they dare not give the opposition a voice?

The ravings of such a crackpot fanatic would not bear comment, were it not for the dangerously growing power of political pressure groups. I refer chiefly to the United Church-O'Keefes controversy, and the action of the Newman Club at OAC.

No one denies Catholic students that right to stay away from plays which offend their religious sensibilities, but why must they prevent others from seeing the play? Orthodox Jews do not eat pork, but I have yet to hear one criticize Canada Packers for selling it.

I should be very much interested in hearing U. of T.'s Newman Club justify their co-religionist's actions.

Yours truly,
Amused Atheist.

birth of h house orchestra associates

Although a Caesarian section was necessary, students of this university have witnessed the birth of the Hart House Orchestra Associates. Primary purpose of the organization will be the encouragement of an interest in classical music on the campus, particularly through the Hart House Orchestra.

Membership in the association is open to all students, graduates, faculty members and friends of this university.

Dr. Boyd Neel, dean of the faculty of music, has been able to form an orchestra of fourteen to twenty-five members. The name of the world-famous Hart House Quartet was revived and with the permission of the Board of Stewards, was given to Dr. Neel's Orchestra.

Chief among the problems facing Dr. Neel in this venture is that he cannot have any option on the time of the musicians. Since they all play for various radio, TV, and concert interests, it is necessary to guarantee them some fairly permanent and satisfactory schedule of concerts before they will jeopardize their other positions.

Because of the temporary nature of the orchestra it was feared that it would not be possible to attract musicians of high calibre. To prevent the untimely demise of the orchestra, certain students banded themselves together and organized the nucleus of the Hart House Orchestra Associates.

It is planned to have a series of five or six concerts in the 1955-56 season. In addition certain lectures will also be given by leading musicians. These concerts would provide a framework around which Dr. Neel could draw together a more permanent orchestra.

As a preliminary venture, the Associates are planning one concert for the spring term of 1955. This concert will be held in the Great Hall of Hart House on Sunday, February the 27 at 9:00 p.m. Included in the program on that occasion will be Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Warlock's Capriol Suite; Britten's Simple Symphony; and Dvorak's Serenade in E.

Hart House Orchestra Associate Membership cards are available to all students, graduates, faculty members and outside friends. They will be on sale next week in the SAC office, at the Hart House Hall Porter's desk, at the Conservatory and other strategic spots on the campus. Membership in the organization is $1.50 and special student memberships are available at 75c upon presentation of at least one ATL card for each two memberships.

The Hart House orchestra is seen rehearsing in the great hall of their namesake before their recent concert.

francescatti and tso

The French violinist, Zino Francescatti, was guest soloist this week at the regular two-night subscription concert of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Francescatti joined the orchestra to play the familiar concerto in D major, opus 35 by Tchaikovsky. Three other works were included on the program, the Overture, "Street Corner" by Alan Rawsthorne, the Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy, and the Sinfonia Antartica by Vaughan Williams.

From the moment the diminutive Mr. Francescatti touched his bow to the clear ringing strings of his instrument, Massey Hall listeners were certain that they were in for a treat. They were not disappointed.

The solo part flowed out above the orchestra and filled the hall, now with the sad plaintive melodies for which the work is loved; now with the colourful pyrotechnics which has earned it a reputation as one of the most difficult works in the violin repertoire. Mr. Francescatti played the first movement at a moderate tempo, interpolating his own variation on the regular cadenza.

The second movement, which may easily become oversentimental, was restrained where necessary, and treated with utmost taste. Mr. Francescatti gave the final movement an attack which was as melodious as it was fiery.

Apart from the concerto, the most interesting work on the program was the Sinfonia Antartica by Vaughan Williams. The work can scarcely be termed a "symphony" in the strictest sense; and if one were to judge by the comments of one or two musical purists following the concert, the use of a "wind machine" on stage to evoke visions of antarctic wastelands, was definitely "tout de trop".

Nevertheless, the machine was there, on stage, innocuously placed among the drums and timpani and glockenspiels, and when Sir Ernest pointed the finger, a little man would crank with all the vim and energy at his command, and the suggestion of a very cool draught indeed would ensue; one sufficient, we might add, for many a listener to shiver and snuggle her coat a little more tightly about the shoulders. (Or was it an open door!)

Not to be facetious, the work, while far from a profound musical experience, was a delight and something of a novelty in the way of concert rendition.

Sir Ernest, directing from a mammoth score, was in top form, and gave a convincing and subtle reading. In five varying and contrasting movements, the music was written by Vaughan Williams to provide a background for the film "Scott of the Antarctic". Throughout, the sombre and highly descriptive work carries overtures depicting the doom of the ill-fated expedition. The orchestra was ably assisted by soprano Mary Morrison and a group of ladies from the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir.

grand larceny at the crest

A deep love of bigness, of large "Economy-Sizes" and of great spectacles is an outstanding feature of our society. If we must have television screens, let them be "giant"; if a store must have a sale, let it be "mammoth"; and if a man must be a thief, let him be "The Biggest Thief in Town". About just such a man Dalton Trumbo made a play, now being presented in an excellent production by the Crest Theatre.

Using as his foil the "might-have-been" frustration of small-town folk, men of small ambitions never realised, Trumbo draws their response to the event of their "big chance" with humour and with pathos, subtly showing their smallness, yet bringing out their greatness. Into the simple pattern of rural life he introduces the influence of big-city slickers, sly and conniving fellows, giving the country bumpkins a chance to prove what a match they can be for sophisticated scoundrels. This pleasant romance of larceny, grand and petty, affords the players a wide range for action, the audience an even greater scope for reaction.

In the small Colorado Town of Shale City, the shabby undertaker, one Bert Hutchins, waits in the night for the biggest gamble of his dull life to come through. On the hill of Mount Miracle visible through a curaway section of the Hutchins' roof, shines a light, the grand of life for ruthless old millionaire John Troybalt who lies dying in his mansion atop the hill. On the loading platform of the Shale City Railway depot rests the only bronze coffin west of New York. — Bert Hutchins' big gamble. Having no hope of getting the profitable funeral of so great a man, Bert has cornered the only casket suitable for his burial, intending to resell it at a profit to the undertaker handling the funeral. But there are only three days left on the option for said coffin, after which Bert's chance passes. And so he waits, watching the light.

Bert, aptly interpreted by George McGowan, is basically an earnest man thoughtful of others, in no sense greedy—for himself, that is. His only ambition is for his daughter Laurie whom he feels he must save from a town spiv, Buddy Gwynne. Buddy is played by a University of Toronto student Les Lawrence who comes over very convincingly first as a ne'er do-well, later as a coarse young fellow basically good and thoroughly honest. In short a fine husband for Laurie.

Beginning as only a petty scheme, Bert's plan grows, with the influence of Max Helpmann's Dr. Jay Stewart and several flagons of grog, developing into the town's biggest swindle. One of the most entertaining performances was that of another Varsity personality of several years back. Dave Gardner, former Assistant-to-the Warden of Hart House, plays the one-horse newspaperman off after the scoop of his career — a chance at the Wire-Services, bringing out fully the amusingly light-headed character of Horton Page.

Never tiresome always fun, the Crest's Biggest Thief in Town is certainly the biggest laugh in this town.

mikado's punishment fits the crime

This university's only opera company, light or otherwise, has opened its 55th season with Gilbert and Sullivan's answer to Madame Butterfly, The Mikado. Under the expert coaching of Godfrey Ridout and Geoffrey Hutton, the Vic club puts on the smooth performance its fans have come to expect. First night fluffs were rare, and well covered.

As usual, indigenous talent has not included an operatic tenor. Grant Brooks, is not entirely at home on the range as Nanki Poo, but his voice is mellifluous and strong in the lower passages. Neither he nor Yum Yum (Anne Hossack) bring their roles to life. Jean McNeill, as Pitti Sing, overshadows her better-billed sister with a natural, exuberant interpretation of her minor role.

Bill Metcalfe manages to find his moderate bulk into a fine ponderous Pooh Bah, giving the character, all the cumulative pomposity of a one word diet. Ko Ko (Raymond Carl) begins cautiously, but, by the finale, is stealing the show with masterly pratfalls, entrechats, and facial acrobatics as Ko Ko is expected to. With Dave Watts as Fish Tush, they form an unusually convincing and coherent team of comedians.

Neither the Mikado nor his daughter-in-law elect has the power of voice and bearing demanded by the role. James Medcoff never becomes the oriental despot, and occasionally even seems to be playing Hirohito. Mary Thomas resembles Whistler's mother in a kimono more closely than the Han-shung-yi harridan, Katisha.

The male chorus does not dispel the original impression that it is worked by strings. Less like Japanese marionettes are the ladies, who sing both gaily and in tune. The whole chorus is unequal to the union orchestra, who blast down the chorus' small voice at every high point of dramatic intensity.

Set designer Paul Harris and his crew deserve high praise for a pleasingly colorful Japanese court (with dragons!) which opens in the second act onto an A. Y. Jacksonesque Yokohama bay (with cherry blossoms). But whose battleship is that in the bay? Admiral Perry's?

NORTOWN CAGERS EDGE BLUES 58-57

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Considering what happened in the three exhibition games the hockey Blues have played with American Universities this season, there appears to be a strong case for the renewal of the Intercollegiate International Hockey League, which came to grief in 1940. In those three games the Blues scored nine goals and had six scored against them, while winning two and tying one. In addition to this McGill, Western, and the University of Montreal have all had games with similar U.S. Colleges this season, and it seems that the level of competition is again about equal.

When you come right down to it, there are three main problems confronting the renewal of such competition. The first and biggest one is that insignificant matter of money. The last time an American University played here, our Athletic Association went considerably in the red, as some twenty-seven rabid fans turned up for the contest. Of course attendance at Intercollegiate hockey games has dwindled quite a bit in the last four years, although the sudden resurgence of Varsity as a hockey power is likely to increase interest both on and off the campus.

The second problem is the one which was largely responsible for the league's dissolution in the season of 1940. The Canadian teams were walloping the American representatives by fairly large scores and our friends south of the border were quite understandably beginning to get an inferiority complex. However it appears from the Blues' recent efforts in the States that the American brand is again on a par with ours. But then that's the way the powers that be reasoned when the league was first formed in 1937, after watching the Canadian teams perform in Madison Square Garden for the Governor Smith Trophy. The trouble was that the Canadian boys weren't actually keeping the tournament uppermost in their minds during a three or four day jaunt to New York City, but still managed to win their games. After they got in a league they meant business when they went on a doubleheader weekend to play say, Harvard and Yale. Consequently when McGill trounced Harvard 9-0 on a Friday night, and the individual scoring race was in danger of having four or five Redmen in the top positions; the Blues would throw in maybe eleven or twelve goals against the same Harvard crew Saturday night, just to keep their own forwards in the picture. It's quite possible that this is the case today.

The third problem is that these American Colleges have a set of rules that differ from ours in several ways. Firstly they play without a red line, making long passes possible; and the style of defence they use usually leaves a rover at their own blueline to break in the clear at any time. Body checking is not allowed outside your own blueline, and consequently their forwards come out of their own end with their heads down. The first thing most Canadian players would do in this case is drop the man with a neat bodycheck, but under American rules you're off the ice for two minutes for it. The Blues ran into plenty of trouble with this one in the first game of their tournament at Troy, N.Y.

Other minor differences come to light as the game progresses. Once, against Yale in the RPI tournament, Paul Knox kept the puck for almost two minutes while the Blues were shorthanded, nearly bringing the house down. While eluding the Yale forwards, he chanced to cross back over his own blueline, and a whistle immediately stopped the play. Evidently recrossing your own line while a man short is illegal under the American system.

Such rules, of course, pose a problem, but then there is no reason why a solution can't be found. Of late the American Universities have drawn heavily on Canadian talent for their hockey teams. Wally Maxwell, last year's captain of the Junior 'A' Marlboros, is now at the University of Michigan, and RPI had nine Canadian boys on their roster in the Christmas tournament. This is bound to cause improvement in their style of play, although they still come up with some strange defensive manoeuvres. In their own territory many of the American teams use a zone defence, and they won't go into the corner after the puck. This happened against Yale in the holidays, when Clare Fisher retrieved the puck in Eli end. Realizing that the Yale men were not going to check him in the corner, Fisher, who had been on the ice for a fair length of time, rested his elbow on the boards and took a short breather, then continued the play.

Ridiculous situations such as this won't always exist even though they would add to the spectator interest in a league of Canadian and American Universities. Although reforming the IHL would take a great deal of time and trouble we'd at least like to see some sort of competition for that 350-pound Thompson Trophy. In 1947, 1948, and 1949 the American and Canadian champions played off for the cup, and there's no reason why such competition couldn't be renewed. That would be as good a place as any to start the ball rolling towards eventual renewal of the old league.

Ball Skirts Rim In Last Minute Intermediates Top 88's 78-73

By TOM WILLIAMS

Inches were the difference as the Varsity Blues just failed in their bid to upset the powerful Nortown 98's, in a rousing exhibition basketball game at St. Michael's high school gym, Wednesday night. The Nortowns, who will shortly meet St. Catharines Queensways in the semi-finals of the International triple A loop, outlasted the collegians, 58-57. In the opener, the Baby Blues downed Nortown 88's, 78-73.

With thirty-five seconds remaining in the senior game, the Blues were down by one and facing a stiff zone. Not wanting to risk losing possession on an outside shot, Pete Potter faked and drove in for a lay-up. His shot hung on the rim and dropped out. Umi Cooper recovered for the 98's and that was the ball game.

Neither club was shooting well, the Nortowns going four minutes before Fred Thomas put them on the score-sheet, sinking two free throws. The Blues led 8-0 at the time. The Varsity margin quickly dwindled after Ed Boguski, an elephantine scoring machine, entered the game, midway through the first quarter. The big rookie, whose main weapons are six-foot-six and an uncanny hook out, hooped fourteen to spark the 98's to a 31-26 half-time lead.

The second half saw the first appearance of George Stulac who led the Blues out of the wilderness of a deficit, which in the early minutes of the period reached eleven points, 40-29. With big George, Fawcett and Madden hooping, the gap closed to two. Madden tied it with a pair of free-throws, and it was nip-and-tuck from there to the end.

At the beginning of the second, Leo Madden and Johnny Braithwaite tangled briefly when ing arms after the foul was called.

The tussle might be termed a "nationally televised bout", as a C.B.C. camera crew was on hand to film the action. The game will be kinescoped next Wednesday night.

High man for the Blues was Madden with thirteen. Tile and Fawcett, eleven each, Potter, nine, and Stulac, eight, were other notables.

For Nortown, Boguski was high in the game, with twenty-four. Braithwaite, thirteen, and Madden took exception to his former team-mate's closer than skin-tight checking. The two exchanged shoves around restrain-Fred Thomas, nine also stood out.

In the first game, the Intermediates were impressive while posting their eighth straight victory. Ed Rigby and Ruby Richmond led the seconds in a game that was much faster than the senior encounter. The former, featuring a fine set and good jump, hooped twenty-four, while the latter played a strong two way game for nineteen. John Dachshyn, nine, and Jerry Wojdon, six, showed well.

Don Guest of the 88's was high in the game with twenty-five. Izzy Mandel, thirteen, Bill Karpinski, twelve, and Edelist, nine, were other standouts.

Blues Meeting Golden Gaels Fedor Leading Queen's Men

A regenerated Varsity Blue Basketball squad will face the Golden Gaels of Queen's University in Hart House tomorrow night. At stake will be the Varsity Intercollegiate unbeaten and untied streak of this season, and the Gaels' chances for the Intercollegiate title. Both teams have shown a definitely erratic form in their recent play, the Blues showing well in league play and poorly in exhibition, while the Gaels have blown both hot and cold against such clubs as Assumption's Purple Raiders. This adds to the surprise potential of Saturday's Athletic Night feature.

After a miserable showing against the University of Buffalo in last week's game the Blues have since gone on to take a close defeat from the Nortown 98's, one in which they showed their possible power. The trick now is for them to hang onto same until tomorrow's game when they meet a very strong Gael club. With laggish Jay McMahon at centre the Gaels have 6' 7" of rebound-grabber to foil such tall Blues as Marv Tile, Alf Vaichulis and Art Binnington, men who haven't yet played up to their potential. Another Gael to be concerned about is Paul Fedor, a lad standing 6' 3", and one of the top Gaels on this season's play. Supplementing this pair are defensive stalwarts Frank Donnelly, Wally Mellor and Boh Angin.

Blues will try to get by with Pete Potter, George Stulac, Leo Madden and Don Fawcett.

A night starts at 7 sharp with Brockport State Teachers taking on the Blues in the pool, Senior Intramural Boxing bouts upstairs, and the Baby Basketball Blues against the Queen's Intermediates in the preliminary game in the main gym.

Andru Defends Fencing Crown

UC's John Andru successfully defended his epee title last Wednesday at Julius Alpar's Fencing Academy, defeating all comers for the University championship. George Montgomery of SPS placed second winning three bouts. Andru won all five bouts and had only five hits against.

Jack Penciner and Martin Nash gave UC domination in the tournament, placing third and fourth respectively.

Andru had previously won the sabre competition and placed second to Montgomery in the foil meet. These two men have completely dominated university fencing competition now for the last year, never placing worse than second in any one weapon.

Wrestling Blues Win

Both senior and intermediate Varsity wrestlers won their dual meets against teams from the Ontario Agricultural College, in action at Hart House Wednesday night. The seniors won 19-16, not as good as the 40-3 trimming they handed Buffalo last weekend, but better than their loss to OAC in Guelph a few weeks ago. The intermediates also won 21-18.

In senior action, Kami-Takara, (T), 123 lbs. pinned McCann, (OAC), in the third round. McQuat, (T), 130 lbs. decided McFadden, (OAC), after nine minutes. 12-4. Stephenson, (T), decided Warren, (OAC), 137 lbs., also on points. At 147 lbs., Smith, (T), lost a decision to Smylie, (OAC), on points. Fournier, (OAC), 157 lbs., decided Hickey, (T), also on points after nine minutes. McCuffin, (OAC), 167 lbs., took a second round pin from Walters, (T), subbing for Orie Loueks, sidelined with a nose injury. At 177 lbs., Waugh, (T), decided Mara, (OAC), 7-0. Brightwell, (OAC), 191 lbs., pinned Wesley, (T), temporarily up from 191 lbs., in the first round. At heavyweight, Robinson, (T), pinned Reid, (OAC), in the first round for the last five points that put Toronto, ahead, 19-16.

For the intermediates, Wood, (T), 123, decided Moore, (O). Dart, (T), decided Brown, (O). Budra, (T) lost by a fall to Kramer, (O). Branton, (O), 147, pinned Mayer, (T) in the third round. Hooyer, (T), 157 lbs., lost a decision to Murphy, (O). Elliot, (T), 177, pinned Brown, (O). Vasko, (T), pinned Hamilton, (OAC). Both Toronto and OAC defaulted one man, to make the final score, 21-18, for Varsity.

Ice Blues Tackle Laval Akitt May Miss Contest

The league-leading Varsity hockey Blues tangle with the Red and Gold of Laval University at Varsity Arena tonight in their eighth game of the current Intercollegiate season. The Blues, undefeated in eleven starts, will be out to preserve their record, while Laval are likely to cause more than a little bit of trouble while looking for their first league win.

The Lavalians took a 6-5 setback from the McGill Redmen last week-end in Quebec City, and looked much improved while so doing. Lanky centre Robert Lafreniere, now in fourth place in the individual scoring race, potted two goals and drew an assist, in that game, and is likely to be a thorn in the Blues' side when the two teams clash tonight.

Right-winger Johnny Akitt is a doubtful starter for tonight's contest, and Ken Lawson will take his place on the second line. Akitt picked up a badly bruised hip last week and has not yet fully recovered. Ernie Bodnar will centre the third line, with John Tolton and Johnny Adams on the wings, while the first line remains intact. Tolton will likely see double duty as a defenceman, along with Bill Moreau, Lou Appleby, Dave Jackson, and Red Stephen.

This game should really be a tune-up for the Blues, in preparation for the crucial series with McGill which begins next Friday. Laval, however, could be just about due for a win. Not since the season of 1948-49 when Queens lost all twelve games, has a team gone through the schedule without a victory. The law of averages says they'll win one, and this could be it if the Blues let up.

Mustangs Visit Baby Blues In Search of Second Win

The Intermediate hockey team tackle Western this afternoon in their second game of the week. Winners in the Osgoode game Tuesday the Seconds will not find the invading Mustangs as easy to handle as their undermanned opponents of the previous outing.

Western handed the Intermediates their only loss of the season down in London, rapping in the winning counter with only 30 seconds of regulation time remaining. The hockey Mustangs, handled by playing coach Darrell McLaughlin, have shaped up this year as one of the best teams that the school has iced in some time. Along with McLaughlin other outstanding newcomers to the squad are defenceman Matt Vukovitch, from Port Arthur who has had both senior and junior A experience; Bill Fitzpatrick, another rear-guard from Calgary, Alberta, who played three years with the University of Denver; and Pete Saliken, who played part of last season with St. Catharines' Teepees.

Toronto held an edge in the play for the opening half of the first meeting between these two clubs and held the lead until midway through the closing frame only to have the Mustangs rally to tie and go on to win in the final 10 minutes. Ted Lotocki and Herb Tilson provided the major portion of the Intermediates' scoring punch, collecting three of Toronto's goals between them. Ted has been side-lined for the team's last two encounters but will be back in uniform for today's battle with the invaders.

Jack Weldrake, Intermediate

coach, feels his club can topple the Mustangs but only by an all-out effort throughout the team. Regardless of the outcome the game should prove to be the top Intermediate hassle of the season.

Badminton Meet For Gals Today

Today and continuing tomorrow, the badminton fans around this campus will have their chance to see some terrific matches. The girls' Intercollegiate tourney begins this morning at 9:30 at the Carleton Club, located at Church and Lombard Streets. Matches continue until 4 o'clock this afternoon and tomorrow they are scheduled to start at 10 and finish up around noon.

Gals are expected in from Western, McGill, OAC, Queen's, and McMaster. The tourney is a round-robin affair, so that each University will have a chance to meet every one. First singles, second singles, and double matches will be played. Toronto's team is favoured to take the championship, McGill, the victors last year, have lost all their stars through graduation.

The U. of T. will be represented by Daphne Walker, IV U.C., Noreen Cossar, II POT, Pat Gordon, II Vic and a newcomer to Intercol circles, Liz Rorke, I Trinity. Daph and Noreen will play the singles matches while Pat and Liz will go to work in the doubles. All the gals have had lots of experience in badminton tournaments and are sure to come out on top.

Meanwhile, in Montreal, the Tribe will be meeting the Carabins in a game that could mean a lot to either team's chances at the title. A McGill win will put them much closer to the Blues, while the Carabins could mathematically stay in the running by taking this one.

It's unlikely that the Blues will let up enough to drop this one though, and the Frenchmen should be in for a busy night in their own end as the Blues attempt to pad their scoring totals. The net result should be another one of those neat Blue performances. Game time is 8:00. Don't miss it.

Court Comments

By BILL CORCORAN

The scene is Castle St. Michaels' on the night of the joust between Varsity, Duke of Intercollegiate, and Nortown, a broken down old lord from Eglinton on the Forth (or Fifth as the case may be). A winged and unarmed messenger appeared at the castle gate and was halted by the sentry who proclaimed, "Halt, who goes there without paying his fifty cents?"

"It is I, a servant of the eye who is called David of Price, who desires admission to proclaim to the world the news of this tournament." The following is the conversation of the two knights, Price and O'Connor (which can be heard on Channel 9, February 9, at 11:00 P.M.).

"Forsooth, oh fans, thy ball game has begun, and Knight O'Connor will bring thee by the eye, a play by play account of this joust. Freeman Masterson and Fisher will lead their vassals forth into the fray. These vassals, surly fellows that they are, are wont to change teams quite often; and so it is that on this winter's eve, many who journeyed forth never to return (this gets worse—yes, it's possible!) are fighting against their former team-mates."

"The joust, thus far, has been fairly even. Knave Boguski has been thrown in divers hoops much to the chagrin of Vassal Tule, who has vowed to the seven orders of the garter that Boguski must go (you were warned). Friar Madden has displayed the lost art of the dribble, and hath furthermore contributed greatly to the cause of Duke Varsity. Would thou agree with all this, Knight Price?"

"Aye my good sir, but methinks thou dost understate the performance of Vassals Braithwaite and Thomas, he of the flaming locks."

"Who is even watching them, for I have threepence and a kidney pie bet on the Duke."

"By my troth, thou art the last of the big-time spenders."

"Thou art no King Farouk thyself."

"Thy shifty tongue will mean thy death, rogue—Draw!"

"I'll draw."

So they both drew and the picture was lousy, but the game was good. Final score had Nortown ahead by one point, with Potter just missing on a floater that hung on the rim to provide a fantastic finish to a great ball game. If you missed the game itself, don't miss the TV version next Wednesday night.

This Saturday, the Queens' Golden Gals are at Hart House. They dumped Assumption two weeks ago, and feature Paul Fedor and Jay McMahon (6'7"), two new and sparkling performers. McMahon played for Penn State three years ago. If possible, try to get down in time to see the Intermediate game, as the Baby Blues, featuring Dacysyn, Wojdon, Rotman, Baida and company are a treat to watch.

Harding Captures Track Honors

Sprinter Dick Harding continued his monopoly of the 220-yd event, as he won first place for the third year in a row, on Monday night. His time of 23.8 sec. was half a second slower than his record which he set last year. Norm Williams of Vic was second, Lindsay Drummond of S.P.S. was third and John Supinka of Vic was fourth.

The junior 220 was won by A. Deacon of Vic in 25 seconds. He was followed by P. Booth S.P.S., R. Hunter U.C. and R. Zwyer of U.C. in that order.

The 1000 yds. event which was also run off, presented keen competition, since it was used as a basis for the choice of the distance medley relay team which will travel to Lansing, Michigan this week-end. The first heat was won by Gord Hueston of Vic in the excellent time of 2:23.0, which proved to be the winning time for the event. The second heat was won by Bill Eckersley of U.C. in 2:23.5, which gave him second place in the event. Bill Gelling of S.P.S. was third and Peter Watson of Vic was fourth.

Val Spring of S.P.S. won the Junior 1000 yds., with A. Englebert in second place.

On the basis of this meet, coach Fred Foot has announced that the team of Dick Harding, Bill Eckersley, Bill Gelling and Gord Hueston will represent Toronto in the Medley relay at the Michigan State Relays and that Norm Williams will be entered in the high and low hurdle events.

Time For SHAREing

BY BILL SMYTH

While Hurricane Hazel was wreaking its destruction across the central North American continent, a flood in India made literally thousands homeless and left them without any means of support. While the resources of our country made it possible for us to help those whose lives were thrown into chaos by the hurricane, there was no money to help the destitute refugees in India. They must beg or starve.

SHARE is attempting to help—perhaps not these people—but others like them, the University students of Patna, India. 20,000 students attend the Patna University; most of them are sick—really sick; most of them live in squalor that we would not wish upon our enemies. A student at Patna spends upon himself in a year what we use up in a month. It is easy to see why the life expectancy is 27 years in India, compared with 68 years here.

But by SHAREing, we have not only helped out some fellow humans—and fellow students—but we have established a link of friendship between the citizens of two widely separated countries, an important link in the world of growing tension and surging nationalism.

SHARE this year wishes to help build a Health Centre at Patna—similar to the one constructed at Delhi last year. But the Indian students do not stand idle waiting for miracles. They—who can afford it less—are contributing much more than SHARE; a dollar contribution is to them, as a $60 donation would be to us. Surely, they do not ask too much; surely an average donation of 75c per student is something that we can afford.

The SHARE campaign will be on the campus from Feb. 14 to Feb. 28. It needs the support of the students—all the students.

Poll Students' Drinking Finns Top Varsityites

An average of 60% of all Finnish students drink, a recent survey by the Finnish National Union of Students revealed. There is no significant difference between the proportion of students and other young people who drink, the survey stated.

However, the survey stated that the course taken by a student did have an effect on the amount and frequency of his drinking. Only 50% of male students in Education courses drink, while 84% of Commerce students imbibe. The survey said that 67% of would-be Engineers consume liquor.

The survey also covered the students' economic conditions. One-half of the Finnish Undergraduates are dependant upon their parents for support. 85% of the male students and 73% of the female students have worked in the past year for wages, but only 19% of the males and 16% of the females earned enough to cover half of their university expenses.

The survey showed that about 30% of all students had had manual labor jobs.

The survey also showed that one out of every five students was in debt for over 100,000 Fmk. (about $420). The shortage of funds, however, had hit the students coming from rural areas the hardest.

McGill's Carnival Gala Fete Ice Blues Will Participate

The University of Toronto will be taking part in McGill's annual Winter Carnival, two weeks away. The U. of T. Blues (hockey team that is) will be playing the McGill Redmen at the ice Festival, held on the Friday night.

The Carnival promises (as well as the hockey game), Mount Royal Night, the Laurentian Excursion, Forum night, the Carnival Revue, and a Carnival Ball. Carnival Queens, a ski meet, a skating show, and a snowshoe race, are some of the features.

Mount Royal night, (Thursday, February 17), which is the birthday of Mayor Drapeau, as well as the opening night of the Carnival is marked by two yearly events, the torchlight parade and fireworks. Five finalists for the Carnival Queen will attend the dance at the Chalet that night. Concurrently a square dance will be held at the Sir Arthur Currie gymnasium.

The Carnival Queen, who will "reign supreme throughout the festivities" will be officially crowned by Mayor Drapeau, on Forum night (Friday). She will be elected by McGill undergrads, on the day preceding the Carnival, from a list of contestants now being nominated.

A new feature for the Carnival this year, is the International Debating Competition. Fifty American universities have been requested to send delegates. As

LIBRARY OPEN TILL TEN STARTING FEBRUARY 14

No Hopes at Present For Further Advance

The University Library will stay open to 10:00 p.m.—one hour later than at present—starting Monday, February 14, announced Chief Librarian R. H. Blackburn. This later closing hour will affect all facilities in the main building, but not the separate reading rooms, Mr. Blackburn stated.

The main library now closes at 9:00 p.m.

The Chief Librarian also stated that the Library Sub-committee of the Senate had met and considered the request of students—made through the SAC and the UC Lit and WUA—that the Library stay open till 11:00 p.m. The committee had decided that the 10:00 p.m. closing hour would be the most satisfactory for staff and students, said Mr. Blackburn. This is the same closing hour as was in effect last year.

Mr. Blackburn said that the Library has at present no plans to stay open after 10:00 p.m. either this year or next. The budget for next year's operations is now being drawn up, said Mr. Blackburn, and no provision is being made for keeping the Library open past 10:00.

The SAC had requested the 11 o'clock closing hour in order that students would be able to make full use of the Library. In an open letter published in The Varsity, the SAC said that "Surely the University should want to keep its Library open as long as possible—that is, if it still maintains that its principal objectives are study and learning".

Mr. Blackburn stated that, although the Library has at present no plans to stay open to a later hour, he was "always ready to hear requests, of course." The Chief Librarian also said that the present 10:00 p.m. was four hours later than the 6:00 p.m. closing which used to be in effect a few years ago.

A greatly increased use of the new library facilities was also noted by the Library head over last year.

Dental Building Not Secret Lab Is New Project

A new dental research and teaching building—costing some $5,000,000—will be built on the land recently expropriated by the University, a Queen's Park official announced.

Previously, there had been some speculation as to the purpose to which the land would be put. Rumours about a "mystery lab" started flying at the beginning of January when the University announced that it had expropriated a block south of the Hospital for Sick Children for a building project.

The block, bounded by Centre, Elm, Chestnut and Edward Sts., comprises Toronto's Italian village and Angelo's Tavern.

Construction on the new dental building is expected to begin early in 1956. It should cost some $5,000,000. The Province of Ont. has already granted $1,000,000 of this, and as the University, with its extensive building program, cannot afford the rest, it is hoped that the federal government will give some assistance, which it is expected to do as soon as arrangements for the out-patients' clinic are cleared. If the federal government does not make a grant, the province will have to foot the bill, the Queen's Park spokesman stated.

There is an urgent need for more dentists and new facilities, according to the report of the Dean of Dentistry, R. G. Ellis. The new building is expected to increase the number of graduates each year from 75 to 125.

Staff

All members of the Varsity staff are requested to drop by the office at regular intervals to pick up their assignments. There are still a few openings for interested students to work on The Varsity's staff.

Close Checking

Queensman Wally Mellor puts a tight check on Varsity's Pete Potter in last Saturday's Intercollegiate fixture in Hart House. Despite such play Potter threw in 13 points and was a driving force in the Blues' victory.

—VSP By Ed Hoshkiw

By MAX ROSENTHAL

During the year, Bob Master-son's attempts to find a "take charge" man by alternating his centres have often proved unsuccessful. On Saturday night at Hart House, Bob's search terminated in the discovery of, not one, but three "take charge" men as Don Fawcett, Leo Madden and Pete Potter combined speed and accuracy to humble the basketball Gaels of Queen's, 71-63.

Coach Masterson's strong confidence in these men and in George Stulac and Art Binnington was vindicated as his Blues viciously tore open a Queen's zone while skillfully protecting their own. As a result of their third consecutive league victory, the Blues hoisted themselves into a first-place tie with the Gaels and Western. The Blues meet Western and Assumption this week-end.

The Blues completed outplayed the Golden Gaels in the first half and led, 36-25, going into the second. Queen's attempted passes into their taller centre, Jay McMahon, were frequently intercepted by Fawcett, Madden and Potter, whose quick breaking very rarely allowed Queen's to settle into their zone. This failure to offset the Blue attack forced the Gaels to check man-to-man in the second half when they outscored the Blues, 38-35.

In fact, so effective was the man-to-man checking that, with seven minutes remaining in the ball game, the Queen's men had almost erased a 10-point deficit, coming within two points of the Blues' lead.

But the Queen's hopes were shattered when their best player and high scorer of the night, Paul Fedor, with 22 points, fouled out with less than three minutes to play. The ovation given him was indicative of his superior ball-handling and shooting in spite of the handicap of four fouls within the first 14 minutes of the first half. Fedor was an incessant threat to the Blues' hopes of winning, especially in the dying minutes of the game. Unable to check Fedor closely was Stulac who had himself incurred four fouls.

The game was thoroughly aggressive and at no time was there any indication of playmaking. Very rarely did the Blue guards set up Stulac or Binnington who were constantly forced to seek their own scoring opportunities.

New Director for Royal Ontario Museum T. A. Heinrich will Begin Duties in July

Mr. Theodore Allen Heinrich, Associate Curator of the Department of Paintings at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, has been appointed to the Directorship of the Royal Ontario Museum. Dr. Sidney Smith announced today.

The Directorship, a new post, will involve an over-all responsibility for the whole of the Royal Ontario Museum, which is made up of the three component museums: Archaeology, Geology and Mineralogy, and Zoology and Paleontology — and the Division of Education. President Smith said that Mr. Heinrich will take over his active duties on July 1st, 1955.

Mr. Heinrich was born in 1910 at Tacoma, Washington, and grew up on the Pacific coast. He graduated with the degree of B.A. from the University of California and obtained his M.Litt. and Ph.D. from Cambridge University. He also studied at Bonn University.

During the war he was on General Eisenhower's staff in the Intelligence Division of SHAEF, and was concerned with enemy railway and other logistical problems. During the first four months after the war he was special advisor on the reorganization of the German State Railways.

He was then transferred to the military government in Germany and served for five and a half years as Chief of the Monuments, Fine Arts and Archives Branch of the military government for Hesse, and later for the United States zone in Germany.

Throughout this time he was also director of the Wiesbaden Central Collecting point for looted works of art, and at various times he served as acting director of the collecting points in Munich and Narnburg and the Offenbach Archival Depot. Subsequently he held the post of Cultural Property advisor to the United States High Commissioner in Germany.

In 1951 Mr. Heinrich resigned from the State Department to become Curator of Art Collections in San Marino, California. Two years later he became Associate Curator of Paintings at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Mr. Heinrich, who will assume his new duties on July 1, will speak today at the Toronto Art Gallery. He is one of the five art authorities addressing special Monday Night Open House gatherings in advance of a twenty million dollar Dutch Art Show coming here February 19.

The 44-year-old bachelor said in New York that he was aware of the implications of an American receiving the directorship.

"I realize that there is some eyebrow raising but actually, it is no reflection on the ability of Canadians. The truth of the matter is that there are no adequate opportunities to train young Canadians in this work. I hope to be able to do something about it.

"Everything has happened so fast that I have hardly had a chance to really become adjusted to the idea. In any case, I am looking forward to this job as one of the really fine opportunities of my life. I've been in Toronto once and I liked it."

The new director believes that there may be room to expand the section of artistic exhibits, paying particular attention to the products of Canadians.

Dr. Heinrich said he would not know what, if any, changes would be effected at the Museum until he has had a chance to study conditions and consult the directors.

"This much I do know, however," he added, "that such reorganization as is necessary will be along the line of making the objects more easily understandable and available to the public."

Many Positions Open At Placement Service

The Arts students — excluding those from the Commerce and Science courses — are not coming out to see the companies who send representatives to the campus, commented Col. J. K. Bradford, manager of the University Placement Service. "So much so," he went on, "that good opportunities are being lost."

Notices are sent out to the various Arts colleges and the available jobs are posted on the bulletin boards.

To the end of January, 122 companies have come to the campus offering a total of 2,200 openings to all faculties," said Bradford. "Up until the last two weeks, all the positions were filled, but at this time there are come looking for permanent employment, about 90% of which not enough arts applicants."

Col. Bradford estimated that each year 500 to 700 Arts Grads are placed by examination time. Many of the graduates in Arts go on to teach, marriage or post-graduate work, said Bradford. Bradford stated the number of jobs available and their salaries are about the same as last year.

The procedure up until March 1 to apply for a job is to look on the bulletin boards cited above. After that date applicants must come directly to the Placement Service, at 5 Wilcocks St. The notices give the name of the company, where to sign up for an interview, and a rough idea of the position offered.

Students to Vote On Fee Increase

Saskatoon: (CUP) Students of the University of Saskatchewan will be asked to vote next month on a proposal to increase their annual levy by $3.00. The funds will be used to help finance the new Memorial Union Building on the campus.

The Sheaf, the campus paper, said in an editorial that the building was about as useful as a "two-headed president".

Short Story Fiends ... Fame & Fortune

Engineers, Nurses, Medsmen, Foresters, Musicians, in fact all students under twenty - three years of age and authors of short stories — here's the chance of a lifetime to win national renown and a tidy sum to keep you in paper and ink for the rest of the term.

The National Federation of Canadian University Students is once again holding a Short Story Contest for university students across Canada, with publication in Liberty Magazine as first prize. Two stories will be selected by three distinguished professors on this campus from those submitted, and these will be sent on to the national contest at McGill.

If you are interested in seeing your great Canadian short story, science fiction opus, or vignette of Toronto college life in print; if you would like to see your work winning national recognition for Varsity and publication in Liberty Magazine at standard rate of payment — or failing that $50.00 (fifty dollars), a welcome sum in these lean winter months; if you have a short story between 2,500 and 3,000 words in length which has been published in a college magazine but for which you have received no remuneration; then N.F.C.U.S. has the contest for you.

The deadline for Toronto is February 15, just a week from this Tuesday, and all entries are to be sent to Freddy Bull at St. Hilda's.

UNITED BENEFIT PLAN POPULAR WITH GRADS

DAIL LEONARD

A. A. JEFFREY

JOHN KORKORAN

Three of the Leaders on staff of ten University-Trained Underwriters

The United Benefit Plan for the graduating class is again available for those who can qualify.

But this year, through the co-operation of leading banks, a further advantage is effective thus providing "the most for the least" ... by far.

For example, at age 20, protection benefits of $29,500.00 are created immediately by laying away only $5.20 per month.

Or the plan may be written or converted to also insure a substantial income for disability and retirement on a basis which will give you an optional Cash Refund at age 65 of much more than you have deposited; ... thus giving you 45 years of protection without cost.

But most important is the fact that the entire plan is underwritten by one of the strongest and most progressive billion dollar insurance organizations in the world. A world's record was established by reaching the billion dollar status in 27 years.

The financial statement verifies $114.50 of assets for each $100.00 of liabilities as compared with $107.00 which is the average ratio for the leading companies on the continent.

To qualify, you must be a first class risk. One of our ten university-trained underwriters will answer your questions and design a tailor-made plan to suit your particular needs and objectives.

1350 Pints Given

Blood Report

By BARR FLINT
Blood Campaign Chairman

It is very gratifying to hear some interested students ask questions about the "Blood Blitz". A brief outline of how the campaign was organized and some of the problems encountered may answer many of these questions.

(1) A Students' Service Commission meeting was held late in November, at which a member of the Red Cross, a staff member from the School of Nursing, and the Students' Service Commission, decided the dates of the Blood Blitz. It is necessary to plan the time far in advance of the campaign. One week was chosen on the basis of previous campaigns.

It was repeatedly urged throughout December that each faculty appoint Blood Blitz representatives. As everyone can well understand enthusiasm for everything except Christmas, flows at a low ebb. Consequently few representatives had been appointed by the New Year.

(2) A letter was sent to each blood rep or SAC rep announcing a meeting on January 12th. The reps were asked to study their respective timetables so a wise choice of donation time could be made.

Obtaining enthusiastic faculty reps quickly for Student Service Campaigns has been one of the biggest problems this year. It is hoped this will be remedied next year by having permanent Student Service reps who will be responsible for organizing all Student Service campaigns in their respective faculties.

(3) The campaign was organized into a quota system in an attempt to know ahead of time how many students would be making appointments. In this way the Red Cross would know what volunteer service they would require.

Let us look at the problem of time more closely. One week had been chosen and the problem was to assure the Red Cross of as many donations during that week as possible. There were 32 usable hours during this week. The Red Cross had facilities to take 60 people per hour. Under the conditions stated, letting students make appointments willy nilly would have created a scene of confusion. Because the same time would probably have been chosen by too many students, a lengthy waiting period for donors, discontent and inconvenience to the Red Cross would have resulted.

Many students wonder about "the quota". The quotas were not set by the Student Service Commission. They were only suggested as a guide to fill 32 hours most efficiently. The

Former Principal
Queen's Dead, 73

Kingston: (CUP) A former principal, and vice-chancellor of Queen's University, Dr. Robert Charles Wallace, died recently at the age of 73. He had been ill for several months.

Dr. Wallace retired as principal in 1951, after holding the post for 15 years, and was succeeded by W. A. MacKintosh, the present principal.

Although in nominal retirement, Dr. Wallace had remained active in many fields. He was executive director of the Arctic Institute of North America, advisor to the Ont. Department of Education, Canadian advisory editor of the Encyclopaedia Americana, a member of the Defense Research Board, and honorary president of the Canadian Association for Adult Education.

total enrolment of each faculty was studied and varying amounts of time were suggested to each faculty rep. One of our greatest problems was fitting the donation schedule for each faculty into their respective timetables.

It was emphasized that appointment cards or some report should be returned by each faculty at the end of the first week. There was no idea of conducting a competition between faculties. Our main objective was to obtain 1920 pints of blood.

Information pertaining to the filling of the schedule was incomplete, even as the week of donations began.

More time was given on request to faculties who found some of their students could not be fitted into the time chosen by the rep. Free times were also published in the Varsity during the week of donations. Before the campaign began it was arranged with the Red Cross to use some of the regular donating time at the Old Sick Children's Hospital.

(4) Lastly came the competition for the Skule Cannon Trophy. When it was found just prior to the week of donations that so much time had not been filled it was felt these times should be opened to faculties to fill on a competitive basis.

It is realized that the system used this year was certainly not flawless. However there are two things to consider at this time.

Firstly, the result — 1350 donations is far below our objective of 1920. Any persons who will give blood please attend the clinic at the Red Cross centre at Elizabeth St. and College. The free times are listed below.

Secondly, any persons who have constructive criticisms as to how to organize future campaigns please write to Blood Blitz Chairman, SAC Office.

Clinic Series Established
Aid Students' Choice of Job

"Students at Varsity should be given more guidance on what to expect upon employment in industry or business", said Terry Hercus, President of the Graduate Business Club, in announcing a Job Clinic Series to start this Wednesday afternoon.

"Our Job Clinic Series is designed to help students decide just what they would like to do after graduation. The first clinic will be a panel discussion on careers in the field of production management. The second will deal with opportunities in marketing.

"Don Avery, Clinic Chairman, has gathered a panel of five interested business executives for Clinic No. 1. They are: Mr. Jack Gringorten, Production Manager of Canada Motor Products Limited;

Mr. H. E. Bulmer, Assistant Production Manager of Massey-Harris-Ferguson Limited; Mr. Gerry Bailey, management consultant with J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited; Mr. J. W. MacMillan, industrial psychologist with Business Planning Associates Limited; and Mr. Bill Vidler, Factory Manager at Philco Corporation. These men will discuss their work and answer questions from the floor."

The clinic on Production Management is being held at 2 o'clock Wednesday in Room 115 in the Economics Building on Bloor Street. Those wishing to attend are asked to make a reservation by calling the Business Administration Reading Room. The telephone number is WALnut 3-6611, local 117.

UC Elections Tomorrow

University College will be holding its elections for SAC and EAC representatives this coming Tuesday.

Nominated for SAC rep' from the U.C. Lit. were Clarke Deller, Harry Malcolmson, and Donald Forster. The External Affairs Committee representative, Bill Smyth, was chosen by acclamation. Deller is active in the Student Christian Movement, and has helped in many U.C. activities such as the building of the float last fall. Malcolmson is presently second year president on the Lit, and is U.C.'s representative to Torontonensis. Forster is a member of the Political Economy Club, and has participated in the Robinette Debates.

The elections for the men will take place in the Junior Common Room from 11 a.m. to 2:15 p.m.

From the Women's Union Association, Di Haas has been acclaimed SAC representative. Martha Binch, Nancy Reid, Rhonda Strauss, and Ann Harris have been nominated for EAC rep. The elections will be held Tuesday from 10 to 4 in the U.C. Rotunda. The duties of these representatives include reporting to the councils on the activities in U.C., in which they are responsible to their parent body.

Calls 26 Million
Water for Tiger

Canada's twenty-six million dollar contribution to the Colombo Plan was called inadequate last Thursday by Professor B. S. Keirstead. "We sent a child to shoot a man-eating tiger with a water pistol and we have been debating whether we had given him an adequate supply of water, ever since," he said.

Professor Keirstead spoke to a meeting of the International Relations Club in Falconer Hall. He spoke on "Canadian Foreign Policy".

He said he did not like a foreign power (the U.S.A.) with offensive weapons on the East coast of Canada, but admitted that the Canadian government had no alternative to having them there.

Bases in Newfoundland were given to the Americans by Churchill, for ninety-nine years, he said, not by the Canadian Government. But still, a foreign power could get involved in a cause Canada would not endorse. He felt that this was unlikely, though. Representation was made in Washington to have these military bases handed over, but stronger representation might have given support to the isolationists of the Middle West, he said.

He wondered whether Prime Minister St. Laurent and External Affairs Minister Lester Pearson have not made a U.S. satellite out of Canada, but saw no remedy for the existing situation. "United States Defence as well as ours depends on the radar screens of the North, most of which are manned by American personnel." Perhaps we should man them, he said, but the fact remains we have not got the technically trained personnel to handle them.

Professor Keirstead emphasized the importance of Canada in U.S. - British relations, but felt that the importance of Canada was sometimes a bit exaggerated.

It was to some extent Canada's achievement that NATO was made into more than just a simple defence alliance, he said.

from out of the past

Editorial Comments

The following items are excerpts from Editorials which have appeared in The Varsity in previous years. These editorial fragments show the topics that were being discussed over the years at this University. However, some of the items printed have not lost their validity with the passage of time.

WE WERE WRONG

We were wrong. Two years ago we said "There will never be another World War." Only last summer we were assured that we would have "peace in our time" . . . But (now) we are caught up in a storm, the duration of which cannot be prophesied . . . Yes, we are at War.

We shall use force as a last resort to retain our birthright of personal freedom . . . It would matter little what nation challenged these rights. It happens to be Nazi Germany. This Germany must go. Let it never be said that we as Canadians and especially as students of the University of Toronto, did not do more than our share to preserve for all time the enlightened way of life, which we may have been prone to take too much for granted in the past. Democracy.

A UNIVERSITY RIDING

We rise this morning to plead a well-nigh hopeless cause — a University riding . . . in the House of Commons . . .

Why should not university opinion, the opinion of organized learning, of that body whose avowed daily work is to consider ideas, be represented as a unit in the government — not diffused into many ridings dominated by party machines?

TOO MUCH FREEDOM

"As publishers of The Varsity it seems strange that we (the Students' Administrative Council) should be condemned by our own paper . . . We are giving the editors of The Varsity too much rein . . . The Varsity considers itself the only champion of the people."

These statements, made at last Wednesday's SAC meeting, indicate a misconception of the role of The Varsity in university life . . .

The Varsity and the SAC have identical aims, but their interpretations may vary . . . In being criticized by the SAC, we are following in the fine traditions of previous Varsity editors . . . It would seem hardly less than inevitable that the SAC and The Varsity would disagree on their interpretations of student interests.

In a definition of the function of a college paper, B.K. Sandwell has said "Once appointed, the university editor owes his entire allegiance to the organization that appointed him — not to any section of it, and not even to the officers of it, but to the student body as a whole."

LACK OF UNITY

But one of the more salient and rather deplorable features of this University is the lack of cohesion between the student bodies of the various faculties. If you ask the average Toronto Graduate about his college career, he will tell you about his engineering, medical, or arts degree. He may, perhaps, mention as an afterthought that he took it at Toronto.

This is a feature not common to all large universities; a Harvard man is a Harvard man whether he took his degree in engineering, law, or applied metaphysics.

SCHOLARS?

In the passing of the last few years it has become increasingly evident that the system of higher education on the North American Continent leaves something to be desired.

Today we are trying to force mass-production on a system that is as medieval as the guild. The University is not meant for mass-production, nor is it constructed to produce the type of graduate that most people want. Social Grace, the ability to make "contacts", build bridges, fill teeth, make a good fourth at bridge: all these capacities are demanded in tremendous lots. Scholars?

Pity and Contempt

The fall of the Mendes-France cabinet leaves France — for the 21st time since the war — without a government and in the midst of a political crisis.

The rejection by the French Assembly of the one man since Charles DeGaulle who seemed able to provide decisive and dramatic leadership for the French people illustrates well the political bankruptcy that France has fallen into in the last nine years. The fall of the Mendes-France regime also reinforces the growing feeling of pity and contempt that Western powers — such as Great Britain, United States, Canada, and Germany — have for France.

One Paris newspaper, in commenting on Mendes-France's defeat, said that the French Assembly had ousted him, not for what he had failed to do, but for what he had done. And this is probably true.

Mendes-France, alone of all French Premiers since World War Two, has had the sense and determination to attack the basic economic and social reasons for the decline of French power, prestige, and prosperity that have made France "the sick man of Europe".

France's economy is still a nineteenth century one. Protected by a high tariff wall, small unincorporated family businesses dominate the French economy, and their outstanding characteristics are inefficiency, obsolescence, and opposition to all change of any sort.

The drastic smallness — and resultant inefficiency — of French business is well illustrated by the fact that five or six construction firms must often pool their resources in order to have the necessary equipment and capital to construct one small house.

Incidentally, France is reported to have the worst housing shortage in the world.

French agriculture is suffering from similar ailments. The holdings of the average French farmer are so small that he needs heavy financial support from the French Government in order to make ends meet.

The vast number of these small, family concerns in French business and agriculture has also made the collection of taxes extraordinarily difficult. The French Finance Ministry has officially estimated that 80% of French business firms keep two sets of books — one for the firm's use, the other for the government's.

As a result, the government finds it difficult to raise the necessary revenues to cover the cost of both social security measures — which the French people demand — and national defence — an unwelcome necessity.

Mendes-France considered his program of economic and social reform to be absolutely necessary for France's health. However, the basic conservatism and individualism of the French people, coupled with the great strength of the French Communist party and the unpopularity of his foreign policies in many quarters proved to be too much for the dapper Premier.

Considering all the obstacles in his path, it is no wonder that Mendes-France ran into a brick wall in his attempt to reform and modernize France's economic and social life.

Bouquet for SAC

The Students' Administrative Council has often been criticized in this paper — and elsewhere on the campus — for a variety of reasons, but no one seems to mention, however, it must be admitted by all concerned that many council members have a "B" for their efforts.

Without SAC support many of the activities which make the life of this University worth while impossible. And the success of these SAC efforts are responsible for the success of many other programs on this campus.

It is true that despite our many hundreds of opinions with the Council, the SAC deserves a big vote of thanks from the students for its work.

Shattered Illusions

By HOPELESS

We stand aghast. Until we had read the reports of a meeting of the Ontario Federation of Labour in Hamilton this last weekend we had always been under the impression that, as a whole, this was a pretty good country in which to live; that people were generally honest and decent; and that an honest day's work would bring an honest day's dollar.

But we were deluded. It has been revealed to us — by some of Ontario's most able labour leaders, who should know — that there is a great criminal conspiracy reaching out across every acre of this once-smiling land — a conspiracy that is bent on forcing down a crown of thorns on the sweating brow of The Average Man.

It appears, from the speeches of the Union Leaders who, of course, are in a position to judge, that every branch of the government in this nation is staffed by corrupt, stupid, selfish, even (the mind recoils from this adjective) ANTI-LABOUR men. The judges are all determined to use every weapon at their command to lower wages and lighten loads. The CBC is unfair. Lawyers are unfair. Doctors are unfair. The Press is unfair.

And more. The Greedy Capitalists — the owners of the means of production — are motivated solely by "O, that nasty word" PROFITS. These unscrupulous wretches hang from every lamp post waiting to drop on the unwary worker. This is what the Union men say and actually they must be right.

Of course the Union Leaders have a remedy for all this. The solution they propose — and they undoubtedly are not mistaken — is to let every man, including, presumably, their own, but their own work and it requires a considerable amount of effort to pass resolutions smearing everyone in the country in the space of a three-day convention.

But we have little hope even such valiant leaders as these will be able to prevail against the forces of darkness that surround us.

The Union Leaders also stated that strikes were the only things holding the economy back from slipping into a major depression. And they should know for they are honourable men — all honourable men.

O horrors! It appears from the minutes of the meeting of this group of selfless, impartial men that everyone and everything in this nation are against Labour except God and the Union Leaders. (And even then the meeting seemed none too sure of HIS sentiments.)

O Woe! Our faith in human nature has been shattered. We are disillusioned, disappointed, despairing. There is no hope or love, no peace or kindness, nor anything but black malice and greed left in the world. Thus say the Union Leaders and they must be right.

Indeed we think we shall never smile again.

ROMANCE REFORMED

Fiction, in its standard contrariness to reality, has pictured the wretched beachcomber as a figure of deep romance, combining in him the dash of a Robin Hood, the impishness of a Puck, and the proud dignity of a Pooh-Bah. In doing so, despite their blindness to truth, writers have created a personality of wonderful charm, a type well-used by Hollywood in its African Queen, and now by the J. Arthur Rank organization in their production of The Beachcomber, showing at the Odeon Toronto.

Interesting use is made of the natural setting in this movie, the crocodiles and elephants being used to colour the plot but never being given the full screen to impress the audience. After such films as the recent Elephant Walk which seemed designed to star nature and her ways, the people being used only to provide a continuity between scenes of animal action, The Beachcomber comes as a fine balance of the two elements. Persons, extreme sorts, on the one hand the very righteous and on the other the very sinful, are the great interests in this movie. The clash of the two extremes makes the story.

Glynis Johns, sister of Missionary Owen Jones, is serving with her brother on a tropical island peopled by witch-doctors, beautiful native maidens and "The Honourable Ted". Ted is a black-sheep type, living away from his native England by family request, comfortably sinning on a monthly remittance from home. Conflict between these two is fated. Miss Jones is dedicated to saving the souls of the island's pretty maidens and handsome youths, while Ted considers it his duty, as a civilized person to acquaint the boys with the boon of drink and the maidens with the excellence of his own person.

The arrival of a British Resident Officer to the island, replacing the last official who, unable to endure the company either of the Honourable Ted or of the Jones people, had shot himself out of loneliness, directs the conflict to a routine movie resolution. In a series of encounters with the rowdy beachcomber, the Resident enforces strict British justice on Ted, something to which he has never before been subjected. Of course Ted responds as any truly noble soul would and begins developing into a fine fellow.

Strength of character is proven when Ted dramatically is in a crisis and the occurrence of a horrible cholera epidemic in the islands gives the chance for Ted and Miss Jones, battling alone against fear, superstition and disease, to settle their differences and let nature take its course. Co-starred in the part of the film is a largish, somewhat elephant who cooperates with Miss Jones in preventing the mutation of Androcles' existence with the lions.

As Ted, Robert Newton is excellent, playing through the scenes most convincingly managing to seem at once a low and a dignified type. Other actors, however, very little though the support deserves praise and bigger roles in the future for his part.

Social Workers' Exploring Minds

"This man is my problem" said a young perplexed voice, while on the cathode ray tube was a view of two men seated in a room where there was only space for beds and, of course, a TV set. On closer inspection, it turned out that one of the men was a student in the University of Toronto school of Social Work and that the other was a man on relief who had applied for help.

From this intriguing beginning, the U. of T. school of Social Work in cooperation with the CBC proceeded to give the best program in the series Exploring Minds this year. It surpassed even the fine programs done by the department of Archaeology in its consistently interesting presentation. Unfortunately, I don't know quite to whom to attribute the excellent script, because the program was so crammed with good stuff that credit lines were cut.

Made up of studio shots, the program had a wide range, but the connection between the two types of televising was not very smooth. There were short blanks and some unevenness in the sound track. This is really the only criticism I have to offer, for the presentation itself, through the experience of one student of Social Work and his problems in helping others, was excellent.

There are two more programs by the School of Social Work on the coming two Sundays at 6:00 p.m.

The management of Eaton Auditorium was no doubt happy about yet another full house last Thursday night. Certainly the Toronto audience, to whom Jan Peerce has always been a favorite, was well satisfied. The Peerce voice is not all it used to be, having thickened in the lower register and acquired a pinched tight tone in the top. The tenor has, however, retained the warm humanity, sincerity, and flawless diction that were always his greatest assets.

The voice was cold and strained in the opening Scarlatti aria and had not warmed up sufficiently to do justice to the runs of Vittoria mio core. But by the fourth number, the jolly tongue-twister, Che Fiero Costume, the voice had gained flexibility and a fuller tone.

An die Musik, which began the second group, was sung with a quiet simple reverence, Warner Bass' accompaniment, which throughout the program showed the sensitive cooperation born of long association, was especially effective in the two lieder.

It was in the operatic arias that Mr. Peerce proved most effective. The first aria, Rachel quand du Seigneur, was beautifully underplayed. Arias by Puccini and Verdi were delivered with verve. The tenor seemed to have saved himself for the arias with the result that he was able to produce all the ringing top notes the composers had written and at least two that they had not.

Dave Brubeck and Paul Desmond are two of the most incredibly inventive men in jazz today — ideas pour forth from their respective instruments (piano and alto sax) in a flood which has kept thousands of listeners dazzled for three or four years now. Only rarely, however, does this profusion of material jell into unified, meaningful music.

The concert they gave (as members of the Dave Brubeck Quartet) in Oakville on Thursday night, made this clear. They played the first seven or eight pieces in their usual competent fashion, with no real inventiveness except in Desmond's solo in Stardust, a set of very original and abstruse variations on that well-known theme. Both men demonstrated their almost hypnotic inventiveness — hypnotic in terms of audience appeal — in Take the A Train. Desmond gave a brilliantly original take-off on the wailing, sliding solo style of the Ellington sidemen of the 20's and 30's. Dave built up one of his overpowering series of chord blocks tied together in complex rhythmic patterns moving far away from drummer Joe Dodge's fundamental beat. All this is wonderfully exciting at first, but after repeated listenings, reaction sets in — The sheer power of the variety and scope of ideas wears off and the listener wants to know what it all means. The answer seems to be "not much".

The next piece, These Foolish Things, seemed to confirm this. In a solo of sparse simple construction, relying heavily on the swing piano style of the 30's, the man in front of me thought it sounded like Fats Waller! Dave achieved emotional expression as he has never done before. Success came when his range of ideas was at its narrowest. There were two or three other moments of great imagination in the evening but no more like this. For me the best thing of the night was Bob Bates' bass in These Foolish Things. The complex, changing ideas of the melody were made to seem so simple by his playing.

Also, entries will be accepted for a Photography Section. Any entry must not have been previously published.

The last few exhibitions in Hart House have been pretty dreary affairs, Mayor Phillips to the contrary. This is not a happy situation, Hart House gallery is in an unusually happy position for the display of art. It functions as part of the country's largest university, drawing on faculty and students for its administration and its audience. While the gallery is not great in material resource, it does draw on the considerable prestige of Hart House and of the university. This is its greatest resource and it has been wasted on an unfortunately large number of recent exhibitions.

However things are a little brighter this week, with some reasonably honest work making an appearance. The exhibition is entitled "Young Locals". The artists are Yvonne Haines, Viktoras Brickus, Claire Shoniker, Bryce Girard and Douglas Sampson.

Yvonne Haines' most striking works in the show are her portraits, three of young women, one of MOM. The portraits are not Timecover, flat, photographic work, rather, the artist is trying to create a personality through strong solid painting, and intelligent distortion. Bliss and Young Woman are the most successful; the artist's fondness for blue is not always related to her subject.

Shoniker creates warmth and light with strong colour worked in small areas and positive statement of form, I think derivative from the older French contemporaries. The force of his painting is lessened by an obtrusive flatness. He does not create space where space is necessary to the full expression of his subject. Nevertheless the painting is pleasing, as the artist develops a more individual style.

Brickus works line, and warm rhythmic flow of softly lit planes and cool colour, into a restful, rhythmic flow of softly lit planes in space. In Still Life the artist fails, chaos is the result. In Image, and Composition he succeeds. In Composition he contrasts a dead angular form — a skeleton of an animal or of a ship, with surrounding growth in free flowing upward movement.

Sampson and Girard do not offer work of as much interest, though both Trees and Keating Street Docks, both by Girard, achieve some success in very different styles.

The Young Locals show is one of the more interesting to appear in Hart House this year, but to my way of thinking represents the lower limit of acceptability.

Print Room

The Print Room has received very brief notice in the Varsity's columns recently, as it is given by most who enter the Hart House Gallery. The present exhibition demands more attention. The works on view are colour woodcuts by W. J. Phillips. Careful design is expressed by high competence in wood cutting. The colours, even the brightest, are subdued, as a light mist obscures the subject, giving great charm to the treatment of the lake and river subjects that dominate the show. Mr. Phillips makes effective use of the simplification necessary to the medium by creating strong designs from the form of his subject, complemented by the effective use of open space. The artist is one of the world's foremost makers of colour woodcuts, a position that he well merits.

HOCKEY BLUES SLIP BY LAVAL 5-4

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Still riding high on the top of the Intercollegiate Hockey League, the Varsity Blues appear to have little blocking their path to the Queen's Cup. But the fun, and that's what it's been up until now, is all over for this season; the Blues have four tough games left and a miscue somewhere along the line could spell disaster for Jack Kennedy's crew.

Of those four remaining contests, two are here in Varsity Arena against the McGill Redmen, and the other two take place on one of those rough weekend doubleheaders in Quebec. Friday, February 18, they meet the Tribe in the Montreal Forum as one of the feature attractions of McGill University's Winter Carnival, and then the next night they tangle with the University of Montreal Carabins in Verdun.

The McGillians, who have played only five games this season, appeared to be easy meat for the Blues, absorbing a merciless 9-1 shellacking in Montreal before the Christmas holidays. However Rocky Robillard seems to have read the riot act to his band of Redmen, for they have won all four games since, and in such a light we can only regard them as an unknown quantity. This sudden about face in the McGill camp from a weak sister to a definite contender was apparently wrought simply by a new netminder in the person of Bernie Wong, replacing Henri Lafleur who had been the victim of the Blues' big guns in December. If we are to believe the McGill Daily, Wong is the best thing that's happened to the Redmen "since the days of the great Jack Gelineau", later of NHL fame.

The Carabins, on the other hand after registering a loss in Montreal last Friday night, can do no better than to tie the Blues for first place, provided Varsity loses all the rest of its games, a highly unlikely prospect. But even if the Carabins can't win the championship, they can at least throw a very healthy monkey wrench into either the Blues' or McGill's plans with an upset in the last third of the schedule. Playing without two of their most potent scorers for most of this season, the Carabins have not been the power they were expected to be at the schedule's start, but they will be sure to be out to upset the Blues' applanct when they meet in Verdun in two weeks.

Laval, of course, are out of the picture. Not even a mathematical chance remains for the Red and Gold to find the top spot. Furthermore the Blues have had their four games with them, so we can discount them right away. The Carabins would have to win all their remaining games while the Blues and McGill lose nearly all of theirs to win the title, and this we can't picture. That just leaves the Tribe to contend with, and the sparks begin to fly this Friday night when McGill visits Varsity Arena. The Redmen, it must be remembered, have three games in hand in the league standings. Give them six points for those three contests and they're hot on the Blues' tail, just one point short of being tied with them. Shapes into a fair battle this Friday, and well worth a look.

From the Blue Room... Laval's captain, Robert Lafreniere, made no mistake Friday night, while adding three points to his total to tie for second place in the scoring race with Varsity's Paul Knox... Knox went pointless in the game, but linemates Dave Reid and Clare Fisher picked up an assist and a goal to keep the big first line in the picture... Don Cossar skidded into a fourth place tie with Fisher with a hat-trick... Badman of the league this season is Laval's Marcel Carbonneau with 21 minutes in penalties... Blue captain Red Stephen is the league's most prolific playmaker with ten assists, while Reid is top goal-getter with eleven... In eight games the Blues lead the league with 192 minutes in penalties, making them the biggest, roughest, but by far the best team in Intercollegiate competition.

Baby Blues Nip Queen's 79-78

By CHUCK DOLMAN

In one of the most exciting games seen at Hart House this year, Varsity's Baby Blues, aided by old Father Time, eked out a 79-78 win over a very strong Queen's aggregation in the preliminary of Saturday night's basketball activities.

Queen's Seconds, who are not regular members of the intercollegiate intermediate league, play all their games as exhibitions. They had previously compiled a respectable 14 and 3 won and lost record, mainly against stiff American opposition.

Both squads played a fast game, featuring good passing and positional play. Varsity's John Dacshyn supplied the difference between the two teams with his superb rebounding. Actually, the fact that the Baby Blues made this game their ninth straight win is explained by examining the number of fouls called against each team. In this department, Queen's won decisively, 29-17, which resulted in four of their starters fouling out of the game during the last five minutes. Since Queen's sank more field goals than Varsity—31-27—the fact that Varsity scored nine more foul shots explains their narrow win.

The Baby Blues received strong two-way performances from seven of their eight men. Norm Reynolds and Dacshyn led Varsity scorers with 15 points apiece. Ed Rigby and his amazingly accurate one-handed push shot had 14 points, Mike Baida triggered 12; with his one-handed jump shot, Ruby Richman and Barry Stroud with eight points each and Frank Palermo with seven completed the Varsity scoring.

Don McOrae, 6' 5" Queen's centre, dropped in 19 points from his pivot spot to lead the teams in scoring. Twelve of his points came in the second half, including a cool corner shot, with five seconds to go in the game, which brought Queen's to within one point of Varsity. Al Mills was next in line with 18 points, twelve coming in the first 10 minutes of the game, keeping his team up with Varsity's early spur. Jim Harrison, last year's scoring leader on the senior team, scored nine points and shared most of the Queen's rebounding work with guard Terry Mattioli.

Day, Mills, Mattioli and Harrison all fouled out of the game in that order.

Cossar Leads Blues to Close Win Laval's Lafreniere Scores Three

By MACKENZ

It was a duel between two of the finest centres in the Intercollegiate League last Friday night as Varsity's Hockey Blues held off a potent crew from Laval in the third period to post a close 5-4 win in Varsity Arena. Don Cossar, clever second line centre, notched three goals to lead the Varsity attack, and was a sparkplug in the Blue offence all evening. Not the least of Blue worries was Laval captain Robert Lafreniere, who sifted in and out of Varsity territory throughout the game to register a hat trick.

Lafreniere's effort puts him in a second place tie with Varsity's Paul Knox in the individual scoring race. Knox failed to get on the score sheet again this week, and the biggest disappointment of the game was the spectacular impotence of the Blues' powerful first line. Reid, Knox, and Fisher all missed wonderful scoring opportunities and their usually perfect passing was way off. Fisher notched one midway in the third period to prove that the "Punch Line" is not dead, but just sleeping.

Highlight of the struggle was the untiring effort of the second line, functioning as a unit despite the absence of right-winger Johnny Akiti. Woods and Cossar drove for the corners in all periods, and Lawson made no mistake with a point-blank shot in the second period, while setting up two of Cossar's goals. Ross Woods drew two assists and turned in a fine two-way game.

The third line appeared to be surer of itself with the addition of John Tolton at left wing. Centre Ernie Bodnar sparked several furious drives in an otherwise slow and uninteresting first period, while Johnny Adams seemed uncomfortable at right wing.

The defence again turned in one of its best performances of the season, allowing the Lavalians only 25 shots at Hugh Curry while the Blue forwards peppered Raymond Lavoie in the Laval nets with 42. Led by Bill Moreau and Dave Jackson, the blueline corps consistently foiled the Laval attack, and only let up in the dying minutes of the third frame.

After a scoreless first period, which saw the Blues outshoot Laval 18-3, Lafreniere opened the scoring for the Red and Gold at 1:22 of the second. The Blues struck back with two quick ones half way through the period to make it 2-1 going into the third frame.

Lafreniere tied it up with his second of the night at the four-minute mark, then Cossar and Fisher tallied to give the Blues a two goal edge. Seconds later the eagle-eyed Lafreniere potted another to bring the Lavalians within striking distance. Cossar scored what proved to be the winning counter, beating Lavoie to a loose puck in front of the Laval net at 10:58. Perron finished off the scoring in the last minute slapping a low shot past Curry while Tolton was riding him into the boards.

Blue Badminton Team Captures Intercol Match

Kingston, Feb. 6 — The University of Toronto swept to yet another intercollegiate championship here Saturday when the Varsity badminton team won 17 of 18 matches to breeze to the title ahead of entries from McGill, Western and Queen's.

Jim Carnwath, Canadian junior singles champion in 1952 and 1953, won the singles title, defeating team mate George Bonar in the final, 15-5 and 15-8.

Later, Carnwath and Bonar teamed up in the doubles final, defeating another Varsity pair, Ray Smith and Don McIvor, 15-10 and 15-4, for the championship.

Toronto was well ahead in the team standings, with 17 wins and one loss. Second place went to McGill with a mark of 11 and 7. Western had 6 wins and 12 losses and Queen's, the host team, brought up the rear with only two wins against 16 losses.

Smith incurred Varsity's only loss in the whole tournament (exclusive of the singles finals). Carnwath, Bonar and McIvor, plus the Carnwath-Bonar and Smith-McIvor twosomes went undefeated in matches with the other three colleges.

Brockport Bests Blue Swimmers

It was a dismal Saturday for Varsity's swim teams, both of whom lost their meets. The seniors were swamped, 56-28, during the athletic night, by Brockport State Teachers College from Brockport, N.Y. The teachers won all but two events. And, in the afternoon, Upper Canada College, led by Ron Wallbank's three victories, dunked the intermediate Blues, 41-25.

Wallbank's performance was the highlight of the day's swimming. He won the 50 yard freestyle in 25.5 seconds, the 100 in 58.9 and the 200 in two minutes and 23 seconds. Varsity's only first place was in the 150-yard medley relay but the Baby Blues picked up enough seconds and thirds to make it reasonably close.

In the senior meet, Varsity's only wins were in the 400-yard sprint, relay and in the 150-yard individual medley which Bibi Stipitec won in a minute and 37.6 seconds. Wienants of Brockport copped both the 50 and 100-yard freestyle events.

Varsity Gals Win

By PEGGY CAIN

Varsity girls' badminton team came out on top of the Intercollegiate tournament this weekend in decisive fashion. They completely swept the series winning all their matches. McGill, the defending champions, tied with Queen's for second place in the final standings.

The tournament was a round-robin series with one point being awarded for each match won. The maximum number of points that any one team could obtain was 15. This is exactly the number that Toronto's gals piled up. McGill and Queen's won 8 points, while Western and McMaster ranked next with 5 points. Ontario Agricultural College of Guelph placed last getting only 4 points.

There was no confusion in choosing U. of T.'s squad this year with many stars around the campus. Pat Godson was the only veteran on the team. The other girls have all had plenty of experience outside Intercol circles and hold many titles. Daph Walker at present holds the T. & D. championship. Noreen Cossar and Liz Rorke have both captured Junior awards in the past.

The matches in the first singles were of a higher calibre than the second singles but play in all games was worthwhile watching. Many interested spectators dropped into the Carlton Club to see Varsity's team make a clean sweep and were very proud of what they witnessed. Congratulations, girls for bringing another championship to Toronto!

Ice Seconds Edged 4-3 Western Sweeps Series

By FRED GRAY

University of Western Ontario's hockey Mustangs reversed the tables on Varsity's Intermediates this season when they rapped the Seconds 4-3 Friday for their second win over Toronto. Last year the Intermediates handed the Mustangs the double defeat in their home and home series by scores of 8-6 and 4-1.

Friday's game started out as the reverse of the first meeting between the two teams, Western scoring first and Toronto fighting back to gain the lead mid-way through the third period. But the Mustangs rapped in two quick goals with Varsity a man short late in the third period to register their win. The only score in the opening frame was tallied for Western by Lindsay at the 13:30 mark unassisted, in a period of hard, fast hockey unmarred by any penalties.

Ted Rogers broke into the clear to take Tom Riley's pass and drop the puck behind the sprawling Western net-minder to tie the score at 8:35 of the second period. John Prendergast who snagged the puck as the Mustangs were attacking, also earned an assist on the play. Peters of Western broke loose from a Varsity attack in a similar manner only to have Al Fleming in the Second's goal outwait the Mustang's forward and smother the shot in brilliant fashion.

Western jumped back into the lead momentarily in the opening minute of play in the third period, but Doug Court scored for the Intermediates less than a minute later to tie up the game again. Maltby collected the Mustang goal from Vukovitch, while Riley passed to Court for the Toronto point. Both clubs battled for the lead as the third period continued until Ted Lotocki scored what appeared to be the winning tally at the 10:11 mark from Ian Morrison. But this was not to be as Western with a man advantage swarmed to the offensive to score the two goals for their win less than 5 minutes later. Back at full strength in the dying minutes of play, Toronto fought to ward off defeat removing goal-tender Al Fleming for the extra man but Western staved off the Intermediate attack for their victory. The Mustangs came close to adding to their total in these final minutes, missing the open cage on one occasion and forcing defenceman Barry Smith to kick out a shot on another try.

Boxing Championships Held

In one of the best bouts of the night in the University boxing Championships at Hart House Saturday, Daryl Henry of the School of Architecture, outlasted Dave Williams to a split decision for the 150-pound title.

Out of seven bouts there were two exhibitions. In the 140-pound class, Bill Clarke of SPS fought for no decision with Meds' Pete Young, while John Iglar and Charlie Gonzales battled it out in the last fight of the evening.

Dave Setten (Vic) won a unanimous decision over Dave Marsh (SPS) in the 130-pound division, while Harry Nightingale gained a split decision from Tom Cavanaugh of St. Mike's in the 145-pound class.

Trinity's John Whyte put on a vicious display to gain a TKO over Skule's Jerry Masuda in the 155-pound division. The bout was stopped in the third round.

In the 165-pound class Larry Corcoran of St. Mike's bruised his way to a TKO over Paul McTaggart of Trinity. Saturday's bouts decided the team that will represent Varsity at the Intercollegiate tournament at McGill this weekend.

points, was particularly outstanding in the first half as he nabbed rebound after rebound, tipping in a few baskets, too, in his best performance of the season.

Agile, deceptive Don Fawcett was the Blues' top scorer with 18 points. Next was Madden with 17. The scoring of their picturesque jumping sets, something that Queen's lacked, were the deciding factors in the Blue victory. Potter scored 13, eight within the first five minutes of play.

At certain periods, Queen's seemed to come alive, mainly through the efforts of Fedor and Bob Purcell, who scored 10 points. Purcell seemed to sustain the Gaels' hopes with adept defensive rebounding. The other high scorer for Queen's was McMahon, with 13, who was conspicuous in his failure to utilize his height to full advantage. Varsity Fawcett 18, Potter 13, Matsalla, Binington 12, Stulac 9, Kuryak 8, Oneschuk, Madden 17, Tle 2, Valchulla, Total — 71.
Queen's — Corbett, Anglin, Summers 2, Milliken 1, McMahon 13, Mello 4, Donnelly 5, Fedor 22, Latimer 4, Purcell 10, Haydon, Lyon, Tptal — 63. (Queen's awarded 2 points — basket interference by Varsity).

RICH, DARK CHOCOLATE

WITH ROASTED ALMONDS

For Letter Writers

By HUGH McKELLAR

"What's going on here?" inquired the fairest flower of The Varsity office, peering over my shoulder as I typed full blast. "A new feature? May I read it?"

"You're welcome to read it," I replied, "but it's a letter to my parents, so it just mightn't interest you."

"Oh, I wish I could write letters like that to my parents. I have trouble grinding out a page. They don't know the people I know, and they aren't interested much in the things I do, so I can't think of anything to write."

At first I was surprised by the flower's dilemma, for I never supposed that anyone regarded writing home as anything but a delightful experience; but on further inquiry, I find that trouble in this regard is fairly general. So I thought that some hints for letters for home consumption might come in generally handy.

If I may be permitted a personal reference, my parents have never been on this campus; they have never met any of my friends here; neither of them understands a word of French, which is my major subject; and they have never taken part in choral work, which is my main hobby. I feel, therefore, that it is my job to make the places I go, the things I do, and the people I meet come alive for them through my letters. A laudable objective, but how is it going to be accomplished?

For guidance, I turn to the published letters of some of the finest correspondents of all time — the letter-writers of the eighteenth century.

Here we see young men and women who have left home for the express purpose of seeing new things and meeting new people. Travel was difficult and costly, and telephones were far in the future, so any contact between them and their parents was confined to letters. And in those letters they made their day-to-day experiences come alive so vividly that they are still sparkling for us, two hundred years later. How did they do it?

For one thing, they made sure of arousing interest by writing of things which interested them deeply; for another, they wrote frequently, so that their memory of events would not be blurred and dulled; again, they impregnated the letters with personality by commenting candidly on the people, places, and things they encountered. Finally, they bestowed some thought on their style, the construction of their sentences, the aptness of their expressions, and the clarity of their descriptions. We know that their families valued their letters, or they wouldn't have kept them for a publisher to find many years later.

I find that if I let more than three days go by without writing a letter, altogether too many things have happened: I meet so many people who fairly cry out to be described, and do so many

There's Twenty Thousand

Your Heritage

By TOM WILLIAMS

"Twenty thousand." That's what he said. "Twenty thousand tiny filters in every cigarette." Frankly, I was amazed. Twenty thousand are quite a few filters, and I mentioned the fact to him.

"Not 'quite a few,' my man," he said in pitying tones. "Twenty thousand filters are EXACTLY twenty thousand filters. Nothing slip-shod or vague about it. Scientific accuracy is important."

Like I said, I was amazed. When I'd asked him what Regal had that other filter cigarettes didn't have, I'd expected something different . . . something like "made milder to smoke milder," or "best for me, best for you," or even "L.S.M.F.T."

He looked at me sort of contemptuously for a moment. Then he'd started, "Twenty thousand tiny filters in every cigarette." His voice was dignified and impersonal, like you'd expect Aristotle to pronounce some earth moving hypothesis. I was hypnotized by his cold logic.

"How? how?" I babbled. "How can you accomplish this awesome thing?"

Again the sneer. "With a machine, of course."

"A machine!" I was disappointed. "Could such a phenomenon have so simple an explanation?"

The sneer was gone in an instant. Shock and outrage flashed across his noble brow.

"Simple!" he snarled. "You call it simple! Physicists and technicians slave for years for this shining ideal, suffering failure after set-back, to produce this scientific landmark . . . and you . . . you call it simple! His features were now contorted into a mass of delicate mauve, and tiny flecks of foam spotted his necktie. He sank back into the arms of an assistant, whom I questioned further.

"I hope you understand . . . I mean, I didn't mean exactly simple . . . that is, it must have been quite a job. How was it before the machine?"

"Terrible!" He shuddered at the thought. "We couldn't keep our factory staffed. Well, you can imagine, twenty thousand filters per cigarette. By the time a man counted the filters for a package he was cross-eyed or a nervous wreck. Any that survived the first package usually lost interest in the job. We found cigarettes getting through with 20,001 or 19,998 filters."

"Well you know we've a standard to maintain. One tiny filter either way could mean the difference between scorching the public's throat (heaven forbid) and the m-m-m-milder smoke we're famous for. That's why more people smoke them than any other filter cigarette . . . twenty thousand tiny filters, no more, no less."

At this point in the interview, the gentleman I had annoyed began to revive. This, I felt, was my cue to depart, which I did posthaste.

In writing this, I've done my duty by the human race. Remember, twenty thousand tiny filters — this is your heritage. Use it well!

things I would like to give my parents the joy of sharing; that I cannot do them justice if I cram them all into a weekly epistle. And allow me to suggest that if enough interesting things don't happen to you in three days to make a two-page letter (typed), you aren't getting as much out of your college life as you could. I go into as much detail as I can remember: what people wore, what they looked like, what they said, nothing is too unimportant to mention in a letter if it interests you.

And where does the time to write the letters come from? Well, there are just as many hours in your day as in anyone else's; the main thing is to set two or three fixed times in the week for letter-writing, and stick to them. If you write as much as you should, you soon get to the point where you can write fluent, interesting English as fast as you can type.

Among the advantages of this plan of action are improvement in your writing, much enjoyment for your parents, and eventually real enjoyment for you in letter-writing.

In Southeastern Asia, more than one billion people—almost half of the world's population—live on an average income of less than $50 per year. In an age of many currencies, this may mean little. But translated into terms of food and shelter, it means that the vast majority of people do not have even one proper meal a day. It means that the life expectancy is less than 29 years.

One might ask: "What does this matter to me?"

There are two reasons why this should and does matter to every other person in the world who is fortunate enough to have food in his belly and a roof over his head.

For certainly these people will not be content to remain as they are. To them—quite sensibly—an ideology that promises to give them at least a chance, is a good one. Communism makes promises to them — it is certainly mandatory for us to do something.

Furthermore, the inhabitants of Southeast Asia are human. Who can tell how many men of genius are lost in the maelstrom of humanity that these countries — at this time — are too poor to search out.

We see, then, why World University Service has instituted the SHARE campaign on the Toronto campus. Last year this campaign raised a large part of the money devoted to the construction of the Delhi Health Centre in India, to which the Indian students contributed much more, and which they built largely themselves.

The goal this year is $6,000, about 75c per student. The money will be used for a concrete purpose; the project deserves some consideration.

GET WOMEN'S ATHLETIC WING

Paging All Shutter Bugs

These students are calling attention to the fact that there are only a few more days to enter the annual Hart House photo exhibit and the Karsh Trophy Competition for the best picture of student life and activities. The deadline is 5:30 this Friday.

Swimming Pool, Gyms Planned For Falconer

A new athletic building for women will be constructed soon, President Sidney Smith announced today. The building, which will be built as a wing on Falconer Hall (on Queen's Park Drive) will contain gyms, a swimming pool, and lecture rooms.

In announcing that plans were now being drawn up for the construction of the new women's athletic wing, President Smith said that the new accommodation is urgently needed as a focal point for women's athletics.

He also said that the new building would be used by "the three groups most concerned with women's athletics; the students in the School of Physical and Health Education, the Women's Athletic Association, and the Department of Physical Education. The Department of Physical Education carries out the "Required Program" of physical training which is obligatory for all women undergraduates in their first year.

President Smith stated that the activities of these groups had been severely curtailed through the lack of adequate facilities. He cited the fact that women's athletics has had to make use of such buildings as the YWCA, the Drill Hall, OCE, the Household Science Building, and even Hart House.

The specifications of the new building include such facilities as a large gym (100 by 120 feet), a small gym (60 by 100 feet), a swimming pool (75 by 42 feet), a corrective room, lecture rooms, showers and locker rooms, kitchen, and storage space.

In his announcement of the new building, President Smith said that the present facilities of Falconer Hall were being utilized by many organizations. He said that 93 organizations have used the building for 318 meetings attended by 16,000 people.

The announcement of the new wing to the building stated that the view from Hoskin Avenue North to Bloor Street to the East of Trinity College. The new wing will be to the East of Philosopher's Walk.

Two Days to Enter HH Photo Exhibit

Any faculty, graduate or undergraduate members of Hart House may enter prints or transparencies for the thirty-third exhibition of photographs. The deadline is six p.m., Friday February 11. The exhibition will be held in the Art Gallery of Hart House from Monday, 14th of February to Sunday, 27th.

Due to the large number of entries in the colour division, the committee has reduced the number of colour slides members may submit to four this year.

Entries are now being received for the Karsh Trophy Competition, also. This competition was instituted for the first time last year. Entries submitted must be pictures dealing with campus life or activities, and entirely the works of the exhibitor, except for the development of the original negative. They must have been taken after January 31, 1954. Print size is to be any size suitable to be mounted on a 16 by 20 inch vertical mount. A maximum of six prints may be submitted. Exhibitors may also enter twelve prints for the A.-F. Coventry award, (senior) or the K. B. Jackson Cup.

Entry forms are available in Hart House at the Hall Porter's desk.

U. of T. Professors To Get Salary Raise Pay-boosts Not Expected to Change Fees

Boosts in teaching staff salaries for professors here, announced recently by President Sidney Smith, will not, it appeared, mean a subsequent skyrocketing of student fees. The pay increases swing into effect next July.

In announcing the staff pay-boosts — ranging from $400 to $800 a year — the President said it is "not expected" there will be any raise in student fees.

The President declined to state, according to one newspaper source, the manner in which the pay increases will be met. When asked if they would come from an increase in student fees, the President answered an emphatic "No."

The pay boosts will raise some top "professors of distinction" to $9,000-a-year, and will affect in all about 900 faculty members of the University.

"Professors of distinction" have hitherto been receiving $8,000 a year.

The pay increases are the fourth since 1951. Fee raises have been announced twice by Simcoe Hall in a similar period.

Dr. Smith declared that the teaching-staff salary increases will tack an additional $200,000-per-year to the university's annual budget. Staff salaries here are known to be higher than those at any other Canadian university. In his annual report the President declared, however, that the salaries still lagged far behind those of commerce and industry.

The President was quoted as saying that the provincial government would be asked for a bigger grant next year and that it was hoped the $200,000 in increases would be covered by such a manner.

The announcement from the President's Simcoe Hall office read:

"The Board of Governors has established a new salary scale for full-time lecturers, assistant professors, associate professors and professors to become effective on July 1st, 1955.

"The present scale is:

Professors of Distinction	$8,200 and up
Heads of Departments	$7,200 and up
Professors	$7,200 to $8,200
Associate Professors	$6,100 to $7,000

Assistant Professors $4,800 to $5,900

Lecturers $3,100 to $4,600

"The new scale will be:

Professors of Distinction $9,000 and up

Heads of Departments $8,000 and up

Professors $8,000 to $10,000

Associate Professors $6,500 to $8,000

Assistant Professors $5,000 to $6,500

Lecturers $3,500 to $5,000

"Provision is being made, in addition, for increases within the ranges," the President declared. "These increases will be determined on the basis of recommendations by the dean or head of each academic division of the University."

Montreal Awaits
40 Varsityites
On Carabin Trip

At 4.00 p.m. Thursday a group of about forty Toronto students will leave for Montreal to return the December visit of the Carabins.

This year is the eighth annual Carabin exchange. On the weekend of December 3, 4, 5, the Carabins from the University of Montreal visited Toronto, where they were entertained by students here. These same students will be their guests this coming week-end.

The Montreal Week-end usually includes a day at a ski-resort, discussion groups and a great deal of partying.

The group will return to Toronto Sunday night. Said Chairman Doug Hamlin: "Nous avons hate au weekend, qui sera sans doute formidable."

Poster Contest
Winners Named
Prize To Katz

Winners of the "Brigadoon" poster contest were announced recently by the production staff of the musical. First prize went to Morton Katz (I UC). Second place winner was Don Warnica (III UC).

The contest posters were judged on the basis of how well the poster captured the particular spirit of the musical as well as on technical factors of design, neatness and excellence of art work.

Prizes for the winners include a tartan plaid tam and scarf donated by the Rob Roy Shop and a recording given by the Promenade Music Shop.

WUS Exchange Scholarship
Japanese Student To Come

A special Japanese student is expected to be registered at the University of Toronto next year. If the Students' Administrative Council, at its meeting tonight, approves the External Affairs Committee's recommendation, the student will be accepted.

The presence of such a foreign student here is arranged by the World University Students' exchange service. The student here this year under similar terms is Mohammed Khalifa, from Egypt.

If the Japanese student comes over, he will pay his own way or have it paid by his own government. While he is here, his living expenses, tuition, and books will be paid by the local WUS committee.

It is hoped that this year a reciprocal exchange can be arranged. A student from the University of Toronto perhaps will go to Japan on the same terms (this will be to an English speaking university in Japan). Students wishing to apply for this year of foreign study can do so in the SAC office.

It has also been announced that there is the possibility for a Toronto student to spend a year either in Nigeria or the Gold Coast on the same sort of exchange plan.

Applications for the summer seminar in Japan are now officially open, announced Gay Sellers, III U.C., World University Service co-chairman at Toronto. Forms can be picked up in the SAC office. "They should be picked up immediately," said Miss Sellers.

Two students from the University of Toronto are expected to attend the summer seminar. Altogether, about 20 Canadian students are expected to go. The seminar, which will be held in Japan, will have as its theme "the responsibility of higher education."

As well as the summer seminar, there will be a study tour of West Africa and one of the West Indies.

Runneth Over

By DOUG STEWART

Queen's: One of the most beautiful houses in Montreal has been given to Queen's University for use as an Art and Music Centre.

The will of Agnes McCausland Etherington which was probated last week deeded to the university her home, "to be used by the fine arts department of Queen's University for the furtherance of art and music and for the exhibition of pictures and music and not for use as a residence".

In the same issue of the Queen's Journal, an editorial appeared suggesting the establishment of a campus pub.

It was pointed out that public relations have suffered as the result of students drinking downtown, while a campus pub would possibly discourage students from getting drunk, and certainly keep imbibers out of the public eye.

Profits would be used towards the purchase of a Student Union reading library and record collection. The editor also suggested that the University could make up a definite lack in campus life by importing more musicians, art exhibits and important speakers through beer profits.

UBC: Engineers from the University of British Columbia have again disgraced their profession, themselves, and their University in a repetition of the riots staged a month ago.

School spirit can be a great thing, but when it degenerates to the level of adolescent hooliganism it's time to start treating the participants as the puerile fools they show themselves to be.

Manitoba: Jerry Colonna, one of America's leading comic and gag men will appear with the Deep River Boys in aid of Manitoba's Blood Drive. For further publicity, the blood committee is sponsoring a tea dance.

At present, Toronto has given about 1350 pints of blood in the drive to reach the quota of 1920 pints. Manitoba expects to be able to reach its quota of 3,100 pints in a campaign lasting only four days. We realize that it's easier to work up enthusiasm in a small college, but when a university like Manitoba can provide one and a half times as much blood as Toronto, we think it's time for a little soul-searching.

News Around The Campus

HH Quartets

The Skulehouse Four won today's preliminaries in the Hart House Quartet contest, the judges announced. The Skulehouse Four are last year's winners of the contest.

Another preliminary will be held next Tuesday, and the finals are scheduled for the following Tuesday.

About 200 male students were in attendance at today's preliminaries. The judges were James Proudfoot, "Chappie" Chapman (representative from the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America), and a representative from the Music Committee.

Fun For All

The Varsity will conduct another of its famous academic inquiries into college drinking this Saturday night. All staffers are requested to drop into the office as soon as possible to learn the details.

Banquet

The annual SHARE banquet will be held in Hart House on Monday, February 21, at 6:15 p.m. Guest speaker will be High Commissioner Rauf of India. Tickets may be obtained at the SAC office or from faculty reps.

'The Spaniard'

Hillel is presenting Wed. Feb. 9 at Hart House Theatre the Canadian Premiere of a play by the well-known writer, Michael Blankfort. His works include the novel "The Juggler" and the screen play of "The Caine Mutiny". The play is called "The Spaniard," and is on the life of Miamonides. This is particularly suitable at this time since this is the 750th anniversary of Miamonides, the greatest Jewish scholar of the last thousand years. When the play was first presented, it starred Edward G. Robinson and Louis Calhern. This presentation is an attempt to bring to the University a sample of contemporary Jewish culture.

Formosa

"Crisis in Formosa" will be the subject of a talk to be given by Dr. V. G. Hopwood and sponsored by the U. of T. Labour Progressive Party club. Dr. Hopwood will discuss the implications of the current tensions around the question of Formosa.

Dr. Hopwood received his Ph.D. degree at the Univ. of Toronto and is at present writing for "The Canadian Tribune." The meeting will take place Friday, Feb. 11, at 1:00 P.M. in room 4 of Univ. College.

Elections

In yesterday's elections at University College, Diana Haas was voted women's SAC representative. Clarke Dellar, who tied with Harry Malcolmson in the first ballot, was elected men's SAC representative by a five-vote margin in the second ballot.

Anne Harris was elected women's EAC representative while Bill Smyth won the men's election. Varsity staffer Smyth said yesterday: "I am very pleased to have been elected University College Literary representative to the External Affairs Committee. However, it is certainly indicative of student apathy at University College that there were no other nominations for this position."

The topic will be "Collective Bargaining in a Period of Inflation". Special speakers will be Gilbert Jackson, of Gilbert Jackson Associates of Toronto, and Eugene Forsey, well-known CCFer and member of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

The series is given at the Unitarian Church Auditorium, 175 St. Clair Ave. W. Student tickets for the series, at the special rate of $3.00, are obtainable at the SAC office.

Other topics to be covered include immigration, civil liberties, community planning, mass media, and international tensions. As well as outside experts there will be several professors from the University speaking.

Students Suggest Changes For Engin. Physics Courses

A plan suggesting significant revisions in the Engineering - Physics curriculum has been submitted to authorities of the department by some 70-odd second, third and fourth-year students enrolled in the course, it was learned last night.

The plan for suggested changes in the course was reported currently in the hands of Professor K. B. Jackson, head of the Department of Applied Physics.

The plan submitted by the students calls for revisions in electrical, mechanical, and mathematics courses within the department. It also urges the introduction of a new course in "probability and statistics".

"Professor Jackson is extremely benevolent in such matters and frequently encourages such action from the students," said Ron Ham, a fourth-year student who drew up the report with the help of other students.

The revisions were being asked, Ham said, because some of the present courses overlap and because some of them have become "outmoded".

He said that the new course was suggested as a means to providing a better basis to the understanding of other courses and because of its own "intrinsic" worth.

"All the students do not agree on every point of the report," Ham declared in an interview with The Varsity last night, "but Professor Jackson has promised that the suggestions will be thoroughly considered."

If the student suggestions are taken up by the department, it will not be the first time that such has been the case, according to Ham.

A course in atomic physics, he said, was introduced two years ago into the thermo-dynamics option of the course at the suggestion of a student.

The present suggested changes came as the aftermath to an Engineering - Physics annual banquet, at which a guest speaker suggested changes.

Ham said that following the meeting, Professor Jackson approached several members of the student club and urged them to submit the report.

Book-burning In Guatemala Shows Anti-cultural Policy

The new Guatemalan Government — recently installed after the overthrow of the former government, which was often characterized as "red-led" — is following an "anti-cultural" policy, reports the News Service of the International Union of Students. The IUS has its headquarters in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

The News Service says that 1,500 teachers have been dismissed from their jobs, cultural anniversaries have been called off, and two schools have been closed since the new government assumed office last June.

The News Service also reports that the government is purging libraries of "dangerous titles" by a planned program of public book-burning. The magazine of the university students, Cuadernos Universitarios, was personally burnt by the new University Rector in a "special ceremony", the IUS bulletin states.

The arrest, and in one case the death of student leaders is also cited by the News Service as evidence of "anti-cultural" activities. The bulletin calls on all students of the world to unite in protesting these activities of the new Guatemalan Government.

Religious Scholar To Speak to Bahai On God's Covenant

Erland Barr, religious scholar, who has specialized in exploring the relation of Christianity to the Bahai Faith, will address an open meeting sponsored by the Bahai Student Group at Falconer Hall, today 1.10 p.m. A graduate of the University of Saskatchewan, Mr. Barr has now retired and devotes much of his time to a study of religion and doing carpentry.

Youth groups in the church and the Y.M.C.A. occupied much of Mr. Barr's time before he became a Bahai fourteen years ago. He said in a recent interview that he believed the Bahai World Faith provided the truth and vitality necessary to satisfy the questions these groups asked him.

"The Covenant, Old and New," is the topic of Mr. Barr's talk. "The covenant, or God's bargain with men throughout the ages, is as important to the spiritual world as is the sun to the physical world," claimed Mr. Barr.

Biology Club's Conversat Will Feature Gay Freaks

Next week will witness an event which comes only once in the average college stay: the Zoology Conversat. The Conversat, the work of the Biology Club in co-operation with students and professors of many other courses, is put on every four years.

Things which creep, crawl and jump will be well represented, with exhibits of monkeys, lemmings, snakes etc., as well as less commonly encountered living organisms such as chicken embryos and turtle hearts. Philosophers and engineering students need not get lost amid all this (four floors of it), as there will be attendants just bursting with scientific explanations; also posters, demonstrations and dissections.

If you have wondered why Uncle Horace is such a freak when the rest of the family are noted for their beauty, or why Cousin Flooie should not marry Cousin Jason (apart from the obvious reason of his insolvency), you will find the answers in the genetics section. Other special sections will deal with fisheries, ecology, wildlife management, physiology and almost any other "ology" you can name.

The Conversat will be held in the Biology Building (second north of College St. on the west side of Queen's Park) on Friday, February 18 (7.30 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.), Saturday, February 19 (10.30 a.m. to 7.00 p.m.) and Sunday, February 20 (2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.). Everyone is welcome; admission is free.

There will be ten more issues of THE VARSITY this year. One more issue will be published this week, on Friday. For the following two weeks, issues will be published on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. In the first week of March, issues will be published on the Monday and the Thursday. The final issue of The Varsity will be published on Wednesday, March 9.

Skule Chorus-Line Will Perform at McGill Satan and Liberace Will Wind Up Carnival

The cast of Skule Nite 575 will be the official Toronto participants in the big annual McGill Winter Carnival in Montreal, it was stated by the Engineering Society.

The kick-line from last November's Skule Nite review, produced by the Engineering Society et al, as well as the humorous Liberace impersonation done by Jim Vasoff, IV SPS, will be featured in a stage show which will culminate the McGill Carnival.

The practice of the McGill Carnival including an "Inter-varsity review" started two years ago, when the Victoria College Society executive has okayed a $75 allotment to cover costs of costumes and set transport from this end. The Montrealers are said to be providing a mock-up piano for the Liberace act, but they do request that Liberace bring his own candelabra.

A total of 15 members of the Skule Nite cast are travelling to the Carnival to take part, including Vasoff who is star and co-director of the show. The Toronto participants will be leaving on Friday, Feb. 18. They will be bunked and fed on the campus during their stay until the Sunday morning, and after two Saturday afternoon shows, they are to attend a show party and banquet. This will be followed by a dance in the large Sir Arthur Currie Gymnasium. The McGill men have promised to supply dates for the chorus if insufficient Skulemen are in evidence.

Now comes the best part of the whole story.

Since the 15 chorus members must pay their own rail fare there and back, they would appreciate about 10 extra "fellow travellers" to allow them to qualify for the low group train fare of $12.90. Arrangements can be made with the McGill people to bed and feed these extra lucky ones along with the performers, for a reasonable sum. Interested people leave name and phone for Jim Vasoff at the Engineering Stores, WA 3-6611, local 44. Preference must be shown to other Skule Nite personnel and engineers, but anyone may apply.

With regard to other financial arrangements, The Engineering

SHARE

Once again the SHARE campaign is with us. This campaign for funds is under the auspices of World University Service in Canada.

Chief project of WUSC this year is the building of a health center in Patna, in the state of Bihar in India.

Articles on this page outline the need for such a building in Patna and a moment's reflection on the favoured position we as Canadian students occupy will convince us that this project is well worth our support.

Here we are given an opportunity of demonstrating our essential brotherhood with our Asiatic friends, both as humans and as students.

While we tend to overemphasize such deficiencies in India as the sixteen percent illiteracy rate, we must also remember that the sixteen percent represents some 60,000,000 people, and that we have a very real responsibility to the remaining portion of the Indian population.

That debt we can, in some measure, remove by contributing to such worthwhile causes as that symbolized by SHARE.

THEIR FUTURE IS C

Why SHARE?

By LEWIS PERINBAM

Executive Secretary, World University Service of Canada.

"Poverty in the midst of plenty" was a dominant feature of the 1930's when the whole world faced the tragic years of depression which wasted men's lives and destroyed their souls. Today, one of the crises of our time is "Plenty in the midst of poverty", for the relative prosperity of North America represents in these times a tiny island in a vast sea of hunger, disease and despair.

For some years, SHARE Campaigns have been directed towards material aid to the Universities of Southeast Asia, an area of vital significance to the Western world. In that region, more than a billion people eke out an insecure and meagre existence; in statistical terms, it means an annual income of less than $50 per person, a TB rate six times one proper meal a day, and die before the age of 29.

Today, the universities of the newly-awakened countries of Asia are playing a leading role in the development of these areas and the alleviation of this human suffering. They represent, in fact, the centres of advancing standards of living in their respective countries. Unfortunately, the conditions of the universities are as poor as those of the societies in which they are situated, and whom they seek to serve. At a Conference on Student Health held in recent years, it was revealed that some 80% of the students of Southeast Asia are in a state of ill-health, that between 15,000 and 20,000 Japanese students (nearly 6% of the student pop.) have TB, and that the caloric value of an Indian student's diet is frequently less than 1800, compared with the basic minimum of 2600 recommended by nutritionists.

Political and economic relations are primarily the responsibility of governments and business, but universities can do much, perhaps with far greater effect by directly assisting their fellow-members. It is at this point that World University Service is able to offer a unique programme for direct and constructive action; WUS is a living symbol of the desire of university students and faculty around the world to collaborate in meeting the real needs of the university community, and offers the means of co-ordinating the individual efforts of universities in a common enterprise of mutual service. During the past year such co-operation has meant:

- prefabricated housing units for students in Egypt and Israel
- $15,000 for a 100-bed student hostel in Korea
- 189 scholarships for Greek students, $3 food grants and 46 clothing grants
- support for 100-bed WUS Student Hostel in Calcutta, India.
- completion of a student centre in Assam, India.
- SENDING $5000 ($4786.00 WAS RAISED IN CANADA, OF WHICH $2394.00 WAS RAISED IN LAST YEAR'S SHARE CAMPAIGN) TOWARDS THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE DELHI CENTRE IN INDIA
- construction of the first student TB ward in Japan
- help to establish a student ward in Madras, India, and x-rays to 800 students.
- X-ray equipment for the University of Indonesia
- $50,000 worth of drugs and medical supplies to Korean students
- One month rest cures in the WUS Chalet in the French Alps for 600 recuperating students of all nationalities

-30 typewriters to vocational schools in Greece
-resettlement of 34 refugees with job opportunities.
-91 scholarships for Greek students.
But much remains to be done. Nationally, has approved a film will require $156,250. Canadian students have given their international community $10,900 was sent from Canada has adopted the Patna Health special project, and SHARE per student for the international.

In these uncertain times, weapons for survival are needed to build for the future, WUS World University community poverty, disease, ignorance demonstration of this mission of World University Service at hand for significant action, concrete, direct, immediate which unites the universities more adequate pursuit of truth. To build our future, WUS continue to give, aid many out friendship and understanding bridge of student co-operation will be no world and no to Your participation in contribution both to the relief of the development of international.

THIS YEAR'S

President

I am very happy again to support to the SHARE campaign. The SHARE campaign existence of a world unity is also a practical demonstration of the Golden Rule, moral heritage of all mankind.

India's High Commission

By BARRY

During the canvas on the campus sometime between Feb. 14 and 28 you will be approached by a canvasser soliciting one dollar for SHARE. No one wants to donate a dollar to a cause about which he knows nothing and cares less. It is for this reason that the Varsity has kindly cooperated in printing these articles bringing a remote problem more immediately to your attention.

The word SHARE has been heard on this campus so much that only NFCUS exceeds it in triteness. Nevertheless it has only been repeated so often because many people feel that the situation SHARE is trying to ameliorate is a desperate one and must be looked after immediately. If, however, after reading this page of the Varsity and the pamphlet published by the central committee of SHARE you don't feel that SHARE deserves your support, you are certainly not under any moral obligation to give a cent. How could you be such a heel?

The canvas is being conducted in the following manner: for each faculty a representative has been appointed. He in turn appoints a representative for each year. Should any class be so large that one canvasser is not able to approach all the students, sub-canvassers are appointed. In this way each student is asked for his donation personally. The pamphlets which have been printed will be available in all the colleges and faculties on Thursday, and should provide a reasonable substitute to fill in the time one normally sets aside to glance idly through one's Varsity.

The SHARE Banquet is becoming famous for its fine speakers and this year the tradition will be well upheld. Dr. Rauf the High Commissioner for India, will be SHARE's guest, and will speak on the problems India now faces regarding student health and educational facilities in general. Dr. Rauf recently spoke at McGill, and his vivid account of the problem of the University of Patna was appreciated by all who heard him.

Many people have been attracted to the money collected for the SHARE campaign. As a result of the SHARE campaign, a health centre at the University of Patna has been completed. Equipped with tiled wards including a machine used for numerous Delhi centre is one project students may be very proud of.

 been asking what happened last year during the SHARE campaign. The health of Delhi has been almost entirely healthy and well-ventilated. A TB ward and an X-ray machine are other conveniences, the subject of which the Toronto Board.

In a letter of sincere appreciation received from the University of Delhi we discover that serious TB cases which might well have died are now on the road to recovery through the facilities provided by the Delhi hospital. Here indeed is tangible evidence of SHARE's contribution and justification for its existence. In the words of Sidney Smith "The SHARE campaign is a witness to the existence of a world university community. It is a practical demonstration of the principle of the Golden Rule, which is part of the moral heritage of all mankind."

SHARE seeks support for indian health centre

By LIZ SCROGGIE

Patna is a city in the state of Bihar in the Ganges Valley not far from Benares. The University of Patna has about ten thousand students and consists of five colleges for arts and science, two teachers' colleges, a law school, a medical college and an engineering school. In its physical make-up therefore, it is not unlike the University of Toronto. But the life of the average student at Patna is however vastly different from that of a student at Toronto.

If a Toronto student cannot get into residence he has not much difficulty in finding a suitable boarding house. At Patna, a committee has been set up to deal with the problem of student accommodation. It is able to find lodging in the residences and private houses for about 80% of the student body. The other students must sleep where they can on the campus.

Most Toronto students are able to buy their books. If they cannot buy them, they can at least borrow some from the library. A very large proportion of the students at Patna cannot afford to buy their books and the library supply is wholly inadequate to meet the demand.

Although shortage of books and accommodation is a major problem for the Patna student, his most urgent concern is that of health. When he begins his studies he has the constant worry that he may be one of the many students who, because of poor health, will never be able to finish the course.

The Patna student does not receive proper meals. In the residences, meals consist of rice, vegetables and fish. There is no milk. In private homes many students live in extremely poor conditions of health and nutrition. When a student does become ill, he must wait his turn with the rest of the citizens of Patna for admission into the very overcrowded government hospital. This may mean a wait of months; he may not gain admission until his condition has become critical.

A TB centre exists in Patna which is attempting to combat tuberculosis, but no special provision is made for students who comprise a large part of the population there. Since facilities are completely inadequate, a student with TB will probably wait for several months before gaining admittance to the sanatorium.

When the University of Madras opened its health centre, a group of students who thought they were in good health volunteered to be the first to be examined. The results were most revealing: over 70% of these healthy students were found to be in need of immediate medical attention. At Toronto we take for granted our efficient health service and the regular physical examination. Upon admission to the hospital at Patna such services are non-existent. Many students clearly do not realize that they are in need of medical attention until their condition has become serious.

Recognizing the critical nature of these problems, the WUS Committee at Patna initiated a campaign to raise funds for a student health centre. This is to consist of examination rooms, an X-ray unit, a laboratory, a ward for infectious cases, arrangements for minor operations, and a small canteen for serving well-balanced meals. The total cost of the project is estimated at $33,750. It is an ambitious project, but the committee is a vigorous and hard-working one. For over two years now, they have been conducting SHARE campaigns, arranging concerts and other fund-raising projects on their campus. They have also been canvassing the industrialists and landowners in the Patna area. Due to the efforts of the committee, the University has promised to donate a site for the centre and the state government has promised a donation of $16,250.

The committee is now asking for $6,250 from WUS International and Canada has adopted this project as her share in the International programme of action.

When compared to the vast need, this seems a small contribution. However it can be an important and significant one. We are not being asked to support a project in which the receiving students have taken no part. It is rather they who have taken the initiative and they who have done the spade work.

They are now appealing as fellow members of the "World University Community" to work with them in solving a problem whose gravity we all recognize. They have shown that they are ready to help themselves. Our task is clear.

In contributing both material and psychological aid, we can best establish a lasting basis for international understanding and cooperation.

Miss Scroggie, a student at OCE, spent three months in India two years ago and travelled extensively there. During her visit, she spent some time in Patna.

SHARE Has Active History Needs Students' Help Now

By BILL SMYTH

For some years now SHARE has been operating on this campus as a relief organization. It might be well at this point to look back on what SHARE has done in the past, so that we may judge whether it is worthwhile contributing to it this year.

In 1951, All Varsity Aid sent $9,345 worth of scholarships, texts, instruments, and medical supplies to Universities in Pakistan and India. This attempt to stimulate the responsibility of the Toronto students to the international student community was so pronounced that, under World University Service, the Toronto campus created SHARE. This new campaign incorporated the Asian student relief project with a scholarship fund and other WUS projects.

In 1952, nearly $8,000 worth of relief and scholarships were distributed about the world by SHARE. At this point seven universities in India, Burma, Pakistan, and Indonesia had received resources, and in return they created international cooperation and understanding between our countries.

Last year, contributions from SHARE were instrumental in the construction of the new Delhi Health Centre, which is now built and operating.

Clearly then, SHARE is doing something. What SHARE wants to do this year has been adequately described on this page: the establishment of the Patna Health Centre, and the other provisions for text-books and scholarships.

All that remains is to explain to you, the students, what you can do to promote this campaign. It amounts to donating something in the neighbourhood of 75c, so that our Indian friends will have the funds to build their own Centre. The University of Toronto, with an enrolment approximately equivalent to one quarter the number of university students in Canada, to fulfill adequately its role in this project must contribute at least one quarter of the total amount needed.

TB patients in over-crowded house. There is no room for these cases in local hospitals. A Health Centre at Patna would remedy situations such as the one pictured here.

ICE BLUES MEET MCGILL REDMEN

Speaking ^{OF} SPORT

By JOHN VOJTECH

With the playoffs in the intramural leagues just around the corner we thought that it would be a good idea if we spread the word to the team managers of the contending teams. The word to the managers is that they should begin paying attention to the manual they received concerning Intramural Rules and Regulations. With the playoffs as close as they are, each team should know what its duties are so that they can enjoy every advantage that is due to them.

A few weeks ago we wrote a column dealing with the abuses which were creeping into interfaculty hockey. This article was followed by one in which we asked of the Intramural Office why they didn't ask for strict adherence to the rules. A few days later we were given an invitation from the Intramural Office which said that they would like to talk over the situation concerning the abuses creeping into intramural sports.

It was gratifying to hear that our complaints had not fallen upon deaf ears. Mr. McCutcheon, assistant director in the Department of Athletics and Physical Education, told us that the abuses creeping into interfaculty sports had been a topic at many meetings of the Rules and Regulations Committee. He also told us that the representatives of the teams at the meetings had promised to look after such things as getting their own timer and their own goal judge. But it seems that as soon as the meeting was over and the representatives had walked out of the room, all promises were forgotten.

For example: hockey games were supposed to start "within ten minutes of a specified time". The referees were empowered to call a default for a breach of that regulation. The Intramural Office, in its fight to get the teams to pay strict attention to the rules did call several defaults. They threatened and fined the teams but to no avail. It seemed to be one of those things that couldn't be solved. So the Intramural Office let the teams shift for themselves until the time when they, the teams, would see the error of their ways.

Of course, some people will say that that is no way of settling a problem. That is very well to say. But the Intramural staff is under-manned and so they cannot go out to see every game of every sport in order to ensure strict adherence to the rules. The staff consists of mainly two people: Mr. McCutcheon and Miss Boyd, who have performed their tasks remarkably well considering the disadvantages they have to work under. That's where the team managers come in.

Mr. McCutcheon told us that he gets two or three complaints daily from various teams because their opponents had used players from another faculty. Such complaints have to be investigated and the first person they turn to is the team manager who must come up with a ready and suitable explanation.

Just to show the job the Intramural Office has on its hands, we'd like to present to you the number of events to be run off during the week of the 14th. 94 games are scheduled in the various interfaculty leagues, PLUS three track events, PLUS three periods of wrestling. This will set a new record for intramural activities run off in one week. The previous record was ninety-one games played during a week in 1954.

So the matter rests in the hands of the team managers. Let's assume a hypothetical situation in a hockey game. The score is tied, seconds remaining left to play, the Reds are in the V Blues territory when all of a sudden a Blue player gets a breakthrough. He gets into Red territory only to be hit into a corner from behind. There is an ensuing scramble around the Red net. The players group around the net in order to get at the puck. Thus, the referee's vision is blocked. He can't see the Blue player, lying to one side of the Red net, pick up the puck and put it in the net. The Red team protests the decision. What can the referee do in such a case?

The above situation could have been remedied if there had been a goal judge in the little cage behind the net. Therefore, the Red team has to accept the decision and go down to defeat. With the playoffs almost here, every goal that a team gets is important. Every goal that is scored against it is important as it may be the difference between a winning championship team and a losing finalist. A word to the wise team manager is sufficient.

Akitt Returns For Friday's Game Fisher, Reid Exchange Positions

Varsity's Hockey Blues have the toughest game of the season on tap for Friday night when the McGill Redmen are visitors in Varsity Arena. Strengthened by the return of Johnny Akitt to his right-wing slot on the second line, as well as a shift in the forward lines, the Blues should be ready to roll out the welcome mat for the Tribe, in the form of increased scoring power on the front wall.

Akitt, who missed last Friday's game with Laval due to a bruised hip, was skating in last night's practice in his usual form. For this game Coach Kennedy has made an important change in the big first line, whose failing in the last few games has been a lack of scoring punch.

Clare Fisher will start at the centre post, while Dave Reid moves over to the left wing. Glancing at the league scoring statistics, Fisher should make an ideal centre. He is second only to team mate Red Stephen in the assist column, while Reid is thus far the league's most prolific goal-getter.

Ken Lawson, who potted a goal and drew two assists in last week's game, will play at right wing on the third line, while Johnny Adams moves back to his left wing spot. Defenceman John Tolton will alternate from the blue line to the third line.

McGill, who have won their last four league games, are the only obstacle remaining in the Blues' path to the Queen's Cup. Although defeated by the Blues 9-1 before the Christmas holidays, they have since improved tremendously and can be expected to put up a rough battle come Friday.

In the nets for McGill will be Bernie Wong, the secret of McGill's success. Wong has allowed only nine goals in four games, and five were on a bad night in Laval two weeks ago. He has yet, however, to taste the big guns of the Blue attack. He gets his chance at 8.00 this Friday night.

Dentists Swamp Vic 50-21 Pre-Meds Beat SPS 46-28

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Yesterday the professional men made a complete sweep of their major league basketball games. At 1.00 p.m., Dent A's swamped Jr. Vic. 50-21. At 4.00 p.m., a powerful Pre-Med team scored a 46-28 victory over SPS-3. On Monday, Jr. SPS strengthened their hold on first place in Group II by taking their second straight from Jr. UC 45-40.

The UC - SPS game attracted the largest crowd of the year. In a suspenseful affair that saw the lead change hands many times, SPS overcame a small UC lead in the latter stages of the game. The SPS victory was their fourth consecutive and helped maintain them as strong contenders for the Sifton Cup. The driving forces in the Skule win were Bill Karpinski and John Gray who both scored eleven points. High scorer of the day was Larry Scott of UC with fourteen. Gary Vipond of UC was next with nine.

The Dent A quintet had no trouble with the disorganized Vic team. The Vic men were unable to score a great majority of their simple shots and, at times, seemed to be playing against each other. The Dent men, on the other hand, were nabbing the majority of rebounds and capitalizing on their scoring opportunities. Zoli January was the outstanding man for Dents as his work under the basket was a pleasure to watch. Scoring sixteen points principally with a smooth-set, January displayed his best showing of the year. Dents' other high scorer was Bill Schwetz with fourteen. Jr. Vic's high scorer was Tom Pocklington with eight.

In yesterday's final game, Pre-Meds' win was never in doubt. Putting up one of their best shows of the year, The Doctors' high scorers were Jerry Edelist with thirteen and Jerry Lansky with ten. For Skule, Ted Grunau was top man with nine.

St. Mike's Humble Doctors Irish C's Dump Skule 2-0

St. Mike's A team downed St. Mike's B 3-0 in an intramural hockey game played at Varsity Arena yesterday. The win moved the Irish into a second place tie with Meds in the Group I standings. The Irish still have a game on hand over the Meds team.

The first period was a rugged affair as both teams were content to play a defensive hard-hitting type of game. Arnold of Meds had the best chance of the period to score, only to be foiled by Andrews in the Irish nets. The shutout, incidentally, was the third shutout recorded by Andrews this season. He hasn't let a puck evade him in the last two games.

The second period saw a spirited contest as both teams' tempers flared. The officials, however, managed to cool the tempers before any riots started. Legge got the first Irish goal, and a few minutes later Halligan put Glionna's pass into the Meds' goal. With but twenty seconds left to play, Wadsworth took a long shot which Horvath tipped in for the score.

Walsh, Deveber, Walters and

Dorsey were best for Meds. The Irish defence duos of Frenette and DeCarlo, and Reddall and Wadsworth performed quite well.

In the second game, another St. Mike's team won its game. The C team defeated SPS VII 2-0 to take over first place in their group by one point. Vic IV, however, still have a game in hand over the Irish. Irish goalie Bill MacDougall came up with his second successive shut out.

Redican and Sherman each tallied in the second period to give the Irish their win. O'Connell, Kelly, Wheeler and Eustace played well for the Irish while Duffey, Brown, Scanlon and Luc gave their best in the Skule cause. The game was a rough affair, with both teams demonstrating that they could give and take hard bodychecks.

In Monday's action, two shut out games were recorded as Trinity A's defeated Jr. UC. 5-0. Farquharson, Lovering, Russell, Church and Cartwright scored for the Trinity team. Dent A's won over Vic III 4-0. Krusel, Aris, Thurston, and Kerr scored for the victors.

Intermed Gals Topped

The Baby Blues women's basketball squad bowed to Ryerson on Monday evening 17-8. Seeking revenge for their last defeat at the hands of the Toronto team, the Blue and Gold showed a powerful offense, something they have lacked in the past.

The Intermediates held a slim 5-4 lead at half time on points by Mohar, Savajarvi, and Kelly. The third quarter saw Ryerson take over the lead, headed by shooting Kay Russell. Victory was clinched in the final frame with a seven point outburst by Grace Brookman, and single counters by Kay Russell and Dot Ann Young.

The Blue and White seemed to lack the offensive power they have shown to date in victories over McMaster and Ryerson. Let's hope they can regain their stride in their next encounter which will be in Hamilton, on Monday evening.

Court Comments

By BILL CORCORAN

This is in remembrance of all those foredoomed ballplayers who had the bad luck to be born in the Toronto area. As examples, we will take two of the most successful of those who came from this section, co-captains of the Blues, Don Fawcett and George Stulac.

Fawcett, a natural athlete, with good hands, a good eye, lightning reflexes, and terrific desire, lacks nothing but fundamentals. Last Saturday night against Queens, he scored eighteen points, without being able to dribble with his left hand or shoot from outside. Almost all of Fawcett's points this year, and he is high man for the Blues, have come on fast breaks or one-hand jumps from the right side.

All through high school he played centre instead of guard. The gyms were so small and the competition so poor that all that was needed was a fake, a dribble, and a dogshot to give the U.T.S. grad an average of 20-plus per game. How, under these conditions, could anyone expect to learn to shoot from outside or dribble with the left hand? The gyms are so small that most Toronto boys can't even dribble with the right hand. Why dribble into a mass of humanity that crowds the available space fighting as it seems, for breathing room, when you can shoot? If you're past centre you're only twenty feet from the hoop anyway.

Let's now consider the other victim of this talent destroying area, George Stulac. He also was a centre in high school, and played all his ball on a small court. On reaching university, George realized his size prevented him from being able to check centre men, so he decided to try to convert to a guard. By fantastic hours of practice he mastered dribbling with both hands, and driving and shooting from outside. But he still doesn't know when to drive, when to pass, and when to shoot. And he'll never learn in a million years in a band box such as Hart House which is itself twice as big as the gyms these two boys used to play in.

They both have great natural ability. They had the best coaching (Roy Dilworth at U.T.S., and Dalt White at Western Tech) offered in the province. They practised hard, all to no avail as they played their ball on hop-scotch courts — and they're still playing on a hop-scotch court.

The Blues have been rated by Ivor Wynne, the McMaster coach and a foremost cage authority, as the top College club in the country. But they might not even win the league. Why? Because they practise in a relic from the stone age and play half their league games in modern coliseums. Lack of facilities not only handicap individual players, but teams as well.

For a look at a new type of Toronto ballplayer, see Nortown 88's, a Junior club featuring Mandel, Cohen, and Edelist, who all have practised on a big court and developed their fundamentals. But even if a boy has got good fundamentals, he certainly won't improve while playing in the Black Hole of Calcutta.

Williams Cracks Hurdle Record

Another record fell in the weekly indoor meets at Hart House, Monday night as Norm Williams of Vic established a new mark of 6.4 seconds for the 50yd. High Hurdles. The record followed his previous win in the 50yd. Low Hurdles.

Lindsay Drummond of Skule placed second in both of the Hurdle events. Val Spring also of S.P.S. was third in the Lows and Ross Linton of U.C. fourth.

Dick Risque of Vic won the Junior division of the Low Hurdles, and Arnold Deacon placed second in the Lows and won the Highs.

The relay of 1256 yds. was won by the S.P.S. team, made up of Dick Harding, Lindsay Drummond, Val Spring and Doug Mason in 2:29.2. Victoria college placed second.

Cagers In Crucial Test At Western, Assumption

The most critical weekend of the year is at hand for the Basketball Blues, with a two game series coming up against the Western Mustangs and the Assumption Purple Raiders, currently the class of the Intercollegiate League. While the Blues have the distinction of being one of the two undefeated teams in the loop at the moment, they have yet to come up against the Mustangs and Raiders, and both clubs are capable of ruining that proud record.

Varsity Women Win Over HTC

The Senior Intercollegiate gals continued on their winning ways on Monday evening with a very impressive 53-28 victory over the invading Hamilton Teachers' College.

Off to a fast start, the Blues chalked up a first quarter lead of 10-4. Hamilton came back with thirteen points in the second period, headed by Wilson and Allen. Toronto maintained a five point margin, led by Sue McLaughlin and Pat Swayze.

The Blues forged ahead in the third quarter with superior offensive and defensive play. Jane Duff and Sally Wallace led the attack with four points each; Pat Davis, Audrey Lamb, and June Hansford succeeded in holding the H.T.C. attackers to six points.

In the final frame the Blues clinched victory with McLaughlin and Wallace spear-heading the offensive drive.

Wilson of Hamilton was top scorer of the evening with eighteen points; Sue McLaughlin was tops for Toronto with fourteen. A total of 41 fouls was handed out by the referees, with the visitors receiving 23 of them. This is undoubtedly a record for intercollegiate play.

gaining their form. George Joseph, the Purple Flash, who faded so weakly in Hart House last year when set against George Stulac, is hitting rather sharply, averaging close to 20 points a game.

Lack of strength in around the hoop for rebounds is still the greatest Blue problem and the Varsity men have yet to show signs of solving this. Another important flaw in the Blue makeup is a loose defensive set-up. If the Blues are to beat the Westerns and Assumptions they will have to either outscore them or defend them to a low score, neither of which is likely unless they straighten out.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

20,000 Leagues Under

For the past six or seven years, Walt Disney has been making several different species of films. Besides his traditional full-length cartoon features, he has made the tru-life adventure films which helped preserve his reputation after a series of lesser efforts. Then he made the first of several filmings of various adventure classics. Opinion on the tru-life adventure films is varied; I personally consider them an abomination. But the other features with live actors have been received by everyone with open arms. By and large they have a freshness and vigor that had almost disappeared from the action film.

The version of Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea now at the Imperial is another, and possibly the best, of these films. It's many years since I read the book (I guess I was about ten at the time) but Disney's version is as far as I can recall quite literal. In addition, it is an honest, good-natured rendering of a book which, if unprofound, is a classic tale of scientific magic and mayhem. Its release at almost the same moment as the launching of the first atomic submarine eighty-odd years after Verne first dreamed of one is timely to say the least.

No effort in making 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea a success has been spared. Technically speaking it is one of the most accomplished films of the season, with a superbly constructed screen-play, able editing by the famed Elmo Williams, and a first-class musical score. Kirk Douglas's performance as Ned Land, the harpoonist, makes a delightfully obnoxious person out of a character somewhat expanded from the book, and as Captain Nemo, James Mason brings his undeniable talents to bear on a part which demands the utmost in interpretation and the least possible real depth. If true justice were done to the possibilities of Nemo's character, a tragedy would result. As it is, we have a rousing yarn with a comfortable moral, which is all that Verne intended.

The two most outstanding features of Disney's film, however, are entirely visual. The problem of creating an atmosphere of wonder about such a phenomenon as atomic power, which we today take almost for granted, and maintaining the period decor of 1868, has been brilliantly overcome; Captain Nemo's saloon, with its ornate pipe-organ and red plush upholstery is as familiar in detail as your grandmother's parlour, but a knowledge of the terrible power which is its reason for existing is always present. The second factor is this: in his filming of the ocean depths, Disney has embraced a realism which is entirely absent from the so-called "tru-life" adventure films. Whatever rubber monsters he has created for his ocean floors, he still gives with their aid a better impression of the terrors of the sea than he did of the wonders of the land by means of the warblings of frogs synchronized with music. The consistent anthropomorphism of Disney's nature films is as unimaginative as the manufactured drama of 20,000 Leagues is creative.

AM&D Around Town

February is the peak of a lot of the cultural activity of Toronto. There is the Canadian National Ballet, the Opera Festival, the Dutch painting show in the Art Gallery starting the 17th, Lily Pons and on 'Campus Erigadon and King Lear.

To-night the Canadian Music Associates present their largest programme of the year in Massey Hall. Six Canadian compositions will be played by the TSO. Sir Ernest conducting. Murray Adaskin of Saskatoon, Francois Morel of Montreal, Godfrey Ridout of Toronto, Andrew Twa of Toronto, Udo Kasemets of Hamilton and Robert Fleming of Ottawa are the composers who will be represented. Students can get tickets for one third of the regular price.

The Royal Conservatory Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for the 17th of February has been cancelled due to "unforeseen circumstances".

On Thursday at 4.00 p.m. the Carnegie Record Collection will again be on the turntables. Anybody who happens to be in the staff room of the mechanics building will find themselves listening to Symphonic and vocal masterpieces by Mozart.

A flute recital will be presented by Bard Bakker, II Trinity, today at 1.25 p.m. in the East Common Room of Hart House. Accompanied by John Linn on the piano he will play works by Gluck, Handel, Mozart, and Ganne. The recital is called by the way, The Pleasures of Pan.

The drama group of the B'Nai Brith Hillel Foundation presents THE SPANIARD to-night in Hart House at 8.30—also the Toronto Young Judea Dance Group.

The U.C. Players' Guild is the only group on campus to take a play up to Ottawa for the Inter - Varsity Drama League Festival. The festival is being held at the Little Theatre Stage in Carleton College. This Earth is Ours by William Kozlenko is the play that UC is doing the night of February 19th. Set in the early thirties, the play described the hardships, depression and fight for prosperity in which a large public utility with its own kind of police and politics fought for its own kind of "prosperity". The theme is somewhat dated now, except the illustration of "the power that corrupts". The Players' Guild will present This Earth is Ours at the U of T on February 23rd.

Andrew MacMillan and Mary Morrison will both sing at the 263rd Hart House Sunday Evening Concert.

McGill Leaves NFCUS Students Vote 293-238

Contrasts

In sharp contrast to the attitude of students at this university towards NFCUS, is that manifested by students at McGill University.

Last night over five hundred of the university's students turned out for a student society meeting at which the question of NFCUS membership was to be discussed.

On this campus, council members who were asked to ascertain the views of their individual college and faculties on the question of NFCUS membership, did not, in most cases, make any attempt to get any but executive support for their stand.

It is probable that campus leaders of the NFCUS movement would not dare to subject the question to discussion and decision by the student body as was done at McGill.

In point of fact the whole problem was decided at the University of Toronto by a very limited section of the student population.

Unfortunately, the issue is decided for Toronto for next year at least. However, we wish to question the wisdom of the action of those SAC reps who did not have student backing for their stand on NFCUS and to express the fervent hope that any future decisions of a major nature will be settled by the voice of the student body.

Mover Charges 85% Of NFCUS Budget Spent On Salaries, National Meets

Montreal — (CUP) — In a sudden move here yesterday, 5,000-odd students at McGill University voted to pull out of NFCUS. The move, affecting students at Canada's third largest University, came late yesterday when results of a vote on the question of membership in the National Federation of Canadian University Students, were released.

The students voted 293-238 to quit the NFCUS bandwagon. The question was put at a Student Society meeting and the decision is to go into effect at the end of the current academic year.

A third-year McGill medical student who went unnamed, made the motion. He described NFCUS as an organization which had done nothing in the past and has nothing to offer McGill in the future.

"It is misguided benevolence to support this ideal (that of NFCUS) which has spent 85-per-cent of its budget on the national conference and executive salaries and only three per-cent on projects.

Jim Robb, past President of the McGill Students' Society called NFCUS "a European concept imposed on Canada."

The mover of the yesterday's motion at one point stated that NFCUS had no influence on the McGill campus and added that two out of three students at the university were ignorant of the organization.

University of Toronto student Peter Martin, who is Ontario vice-president of NFCUS and who was visiting the McGill campus this week, described the withdrawal as a "mistake".

Martin said that McGill was "selling herself short by implying that she was not important to the organization."

"This is not so," Martin said, "rather, McGill is looked to for leadership."

Martin deplored also what he called the erroneous use of "we" and "they" in connection with the organization.

"NFCUS means McGill students as much as it means those of any other university in Canada. Policy formulated at the National Conference is done so by Presidents of student societies as well as NFCUS committee members."

Martin declared that it was only through unity that the Federation could succeed.

Toronto's student council recently voted 20-5 to continue membership in the national federation next year at the 50c level. This decision was reached without the popular referendum or student vote used in the McGill decision.

McGill is the third university to secede from the national federation during this academic year. The University of Montreal seceded during the national conference last October. Acadia University seceded after the conference because "there is no practical value in the organization."

One university, the University of British Columbia, has not yet decided the question of its membership in the NFCUS.

Canada's Role Debate Topic McInnis Guest

International affairs will be discussed in the Hart House debate next Wednesday, when Edgar McInnis, president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, will be present as an honorary visitor. The speakers on the paper, Jim Vasoff, Peter Martin, Tom Hammond, and Peter Martin will debate the topic: "This House believes that in international affairs Canada is stuck in the middle."

Mr. McInnis, in addition to his position with the Institute, was formerly a distinguished member of the History department, and was twice chairman of the Hart House Debates Committee.

Undergraduates, who are interested in running for the Debates committee, are reminded according to George Keli, secretary of the committee, that in order to be eligible for election they are required to have spoken in at least one debate during the current year, and that this is the last chance to qualify, if they have not done so.

Student Aid Program Is Supported Farmers Endorse NFCUS Proposals

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has officially endorsed the NFCUS proposals for increased governmental aid to students. Norm Chalmers, NFCUS Scholarships Committee Chairman, said that he had received a letter from Mr. David Kirk, Secretary of the National Farmers' Federation in which it was stated that the organization had approved the scholarships proposals at their recent annual meeting.

Mr. Kirk said that the Council of the Federation had passed a resolution saying that the federal and provincial governments should make provision for increased and more numerous scholarships and loan funds for deserving students.

The Federation, which represents close to a million Canadian farmers, is likely to present the substance of this resolution to the federal cabinet when it makes its annual presentation on March 3, Chalmers said.

Chalmers also said that the Engineering Institute of Canada is expected to take a stand favouring more student aid. A proposal to endorse NFCUS's plan will likely be presented at the Institute's next meeting in Hamilton this month, he stated.

Chalmers described both groups as being "highly influential".

The proposals for increased student aid have been pressed by students for the past seven years. However, as yet, there has been little action taken by any government on the problem.

NFCUS, as well as approaching several professional and producers' associations for their support, has presented direct briefs to the federal government on several occasions. The National Federation is also taking a coast-to-coast survey of student earnings to document their case for increased governmental aid to students.

Dave Wood, Torontonensis Editor, is here seen handing the 'Nensis Nonsense Trophy to the winners of the Winter Carnival Orienteering Contest. Wood and Clarke Deller specially created the trophy — a genuine work of art. They claim that the base of the Trophy was taken from the first fence-post erected on the campus. Mining and Geology won the contest. From left to right the people are: Don Cheeseman of Mining and Geology, Ted Bowen of the Calendar Committee, Bruce Spanton, also from Mining, and Dave Wood.

SAC At A Glance

Plans for a possible 1955-56 All-Varsity Revue were given a spur at the Students' Administrative Council's bi-monthly meeting last Wednesday night. The Council unanimously voted $50.00 to be used as prize money for any student writing the best script for the proposed production.

Michael Shoemaker, Trinity, head of the AVR Committee, said in the debate preceding the vote that he could not guarantee the success of the future AVR. "That will depend upon you and your help," he told the other Council members.

In investigating the possibi-ties for a 1955-56 Revue Shoemaker found that many professors as well as students were interested in its production. Refusal of the grant would mean "cutting off the life blood of something vitally necessary to this University," he told the assembly.

Ann Stark, III POT, felt that more definite facts about the AVR should be obtained before the matter was voted upon. Blue and White Chairman Bill Harris, IV Forestry, thought the additional expense was warranted even though the Revue's future was "most indefinite." It was not a question of its possible success as much as whether the SAC could afford it, he said.

Shoemaker admitted he could not state anything definite at present about such an "intangible situation", as the AVR's production would depend in great measure on the co-operation of the Council in the matter of the prize.

The grant meant an amendment to the annual budget drawn up by the Finance Commission. The Commission had originally voted down the $50.00 on grounds that the Council could not afford the extra expenditure. This decision was reversed on the basis of a recent University grant to the Council to the amount of $500 — to be used for the SAC-run Housing Service. This grant had not been received by the Finance Commission before the budget was drawn up.

The award will be given for the best book submitted in a campus-wide contest. It will not include the musical score, however.

SAC Wants AVR Also Gives Money

The Students' Administrative Council, last meeting, besides hearing a wrangle about "extraneous matter" in committees' minutes:

- approved charging to Torontonensis for a Winter Carnival Trophy engraving;
- were mystified when a proposed Blue and White sponsored "Mass Communication and Independent Minds" colloquium which would have included Adlai Stevenson or the President of N.B.C. and a number of U of T professors fell through because "some professors felt they could not appear with others";
- were pleased to hear that Hart House Theatre tickets now at the student price of 75c would sell in '55-'56 at four for $2.50;
- were informed net B & W profit was $74.58;
- groaned on hearing there is provision for an annual seal to be added on a charter of membership in NFCUS but permitted to be framed and hung in the SAC building;
- learned that there is confusion in the executive of the U.N. Club and rejected their request for funds;
- smiled when told the continuance of Toronto's membership in NFCUS was accepted with gratification;
- were asked to note the quality of blood of the Blood Campaign and to investigate the preliminary pricking which caused someone to keel over;
- welcomed a grant of $500 from the Board of Governors toward the housing service of SAC;
- wrangled over the non-existent Assistant Editor of Torontonensis and where his salary should go, and whether or not he provided continuity;
- heard the Dents rep., Joe Slogan, say that for once, he was in complete agreement with The Varsity Editor; in fact, he agreed twice;
- learned that the SHARE campaign starts Monday, Feb. 14 and lasts till Feb. 28;
- applauded upon the introduction of the new men's UC rep., Clarke Deller;
- learned that the term "Law Society" could cause some confusion in reference to the School of Law or an institution on Queen St.;
- gave $1,000 to NFCUS for 54-55 fees;
- learned NFCUS' 10% discount for students in local stores was planned to start next fall;
- were asked to consider removing the blocks of ice on the front campus and hoped the high vapour pressure of ice would solve the problem for them.

Horrors! The Engineers' Little Red Skulehouse has been desecrated, even ravaged, by the fierce Meds-men, who early this morning put this sign on the Skulehouse advertising the Meds At Home. Ever-vigilant Skulemen (Oops - Professional Engineers - pardon us) soon removed the offending sign.

All Nations Should Be Admitted To UN 81% Students Say In Liberal Club Poll

Admission of Red China to the UN, more Social Welfare schemes for Canadians, and less arms and more foreign aid are all favoured by U of T students, said L. Levenstein, Liberal Club member, on the basis of a campus wide poll taken by the political club.

Levenstein said that the poll showed that students emphatically believe that every sovereign state in the world should be admitted to the United Nations, including Red China and Franco Spain.

The poll showed that 81% of all the students asked by the Liberal Club poll stated that no nation should be left out of the UN, while 19% were opposed.

The Liberal Club conducted the poll to sound out general student opinion before presenting their resolutions to the coming annual conference of the Canadian University Liberal Federation convention. The resolutions that they submit will be in part based on the results of this campus poll.

The Liberal Club questioned approximately 100 persons whose names were chosen at random from the student directory.

The second question that was asked in the poll was "Do you favour an increase in the Social Welfare Program of Canada?"

Of the students polled, 76% said yes and 24% said no.

The third question that was asked revealed the closest division of campus opinion. The students were asked if they thought that some of the money now being spent on defence by the Canadian Government would be better invested in foreign aid schemes such as the Colombo Plan.

The students' answer to this question was, by a 60% to 40% margin, "Yes".

However, according to Levenstein, a good many students found it difficult to answer this question.

The resolutions that the Liberal Club will present to the National Convention will be drafted at a day's meeting.

Nomination Time Comes To HH Old Posters Inspire Prospects

With nominations coming up next week in Hart House, old election posters have been put up along the corridors. They will be displayed for the rest of this week for the amusement of members of the House generally, and to inspire potential candidates. The new ones will be put up at the beginning of next week.

Campaigners may advertise by these posters, or by hand bills, but are not allowed to pass out beer, cigars or women as election come-ons. Elections will be held for the five major committees, House, Library, Music, Art and Debates, and for the Squash Rackets Committee. Nominations for any of these committees will be accepted from the 14th to the 18th of February, next week. Nomination forms will be handed out every day next week.

Each candidate who wishes to run, must bring a mover and a seconder to the Undergraduate Activities Office. Information regarding election procedure is available there now, it was announced.

'Time Consumed' Frat Card Ban Brings Burning

No more card-playing at the Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity.

This was the anti-gambling decree which emerged from a stormy three-hour meeting of the fraternity's house committee one night this week. Directly after the session, members of the anti-gambling faction of the house took a few hundred cards outside the front of their 115 St. George Street house and burned them ceremoniously.

The ban on card-playing came according to one house-member because some members thought the pastime was "getting out of hand."

"The fraternity felt that gambling was being carried too far," the house spokesman said, "and that the only way to stop it was to stop card-playing entirely."

During the bonfire, motorists stopped to gape and the next day, according to one source, students were seen carrying checkers and chessboards into the house.

Students are warned to watch out for their clothing. Several thefts, especially of coats, have been reported lately. The University Library has been the scene of quite a few of these robberies.

Sugared Hearts Beating

"In spite of the opposition of anti-vivisectionists", said Bristol Foster, one of the organizers of the forthcoming Zoology Conversat, the exhibition will feature live turtle hearts still beating in sugar solution and frog muscles pulling up weights.

There will also be an exhibition of opened chicken eggs to show the growth of a baby chick. "Humans develop similarly," said Foster, "and this will be pointed out."

The phenomena of multiple births will also be one of many exhibits at the Conversat which will be held at this University from February 18 to 21.

Among the other features of the exhibition will be a flowing stream which will depict the life history of the speckled trout. The stream, which will be built by students and staff in the Department of Zoology, will depict in detail the natural habitat of the trout.

Also shown at the exhibition will be such things as mutations, mice, mink, and moss. The Conversat is sponsored by the campus Biology Club, which is hoping to hold a similar display in Botany in 1957. The Zoology Conversats are usually held only once every four years.

Several Religions Feature at Bahai

Sacred writings from the scriptures of several religions of the world were included in the Devotional Service sponsored by the Baha'i Student Group at Hart House Chapel, Thursday, 12.10 to 1.00 p.m. Writings from the Old and New Testaments, the Koran of Mohammed, Baha'i Sacred Writings and the Scriptures of Zoroaster, were used, together with the Lord's prayer of the Christians and Moslems and a Baha'i prayer for all mankind.

Dogs of War

Election time is nearly upon us, and within a few weeks, most colleges will be embroiled in the heat of electoral campaigning. Hart House also contracts its annual case of spring fever of which the posters presently decorating its halls are symptomatic.

This constitutes an admirable time for the examination of student government, its function and nature, and the practical evidence of its worth on this campus.

Hart House elections are often times colorful events and a great deal of interest is aroused. This is probably due to two factors.

The first of these is that the elections in Hart House are, in effect, campus-wide affairs. Because of this the positions on Hart House committees represent something beyond mere college popularity.

Secondly, the reputation of Hart House is such that it is considered an honor to serve on one of its committees.

The situation with the Students' Administrative Council is far different. Each college or faculty elects one representative (two in the case of some of the larger ones) and in point of fact the position of that representative on the council is meaningless.

Under optimum conditions, he represents the views of the students of one college or faculty. More frequently he mirrors the opinions of his college executive, and all too frequently, he represents no one but himself.

Election to one or other of the key positions places a person in an even more meaningless position. For example, the president of the Council does not in fact represent the choice of the majority of the students of this campus but rather that of a select group of students. Similarly with the other important council posts.

If student government at this level is to have any meaning for the average student it would seem imperative that elections, at least to the major positions, should be campus-wide in their scope.

Secondly, the SAC does not have the position of esteem that an organization existing to provide a means of communication for nearly 10,000 students should have. There are many reasons for this.

Chief of these is that the Students' Council has so insignificant a degree of autonomy that many people would decline to be a member. Conceived as a committee for communication between the students and the Board of Governors, the Students' Administrative Council is, in fact, not a government at all but a select committee.

To emphasize how little responsible and autonomous government there is for students on this campus, one need only point to the University of British Columbia where the Alma Mater Society is completely autonomous; or to the University of Alberta where the council president is a member of the university's Board of Governors; or even to such small institutions as Carleton College where they maintain their own judicial committee.

In comparison with any or all of these universities and colleges, student government at this university is in an unbelievable condition.

The challenge is with us, and the answer to the problem lies in our own hands, if we will but grasp the sword.

Communism, Luxury and Neglect

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Bertrand Russell has written in a letter to the Manchester Guardian "if no method of arbitration can be found, it is not unlikely that the human race will cease to exist before the end of the present year."

Formosa could be our doom. But should we settle the Formosan crisis, we are destined to face continuing crises from which in turn we will have to back up if we are to avoid suicidal war. For we cannot hope to protect our decadent world from successful communism. We are only bluffing ourselves by trusting to our weapons and physical might.

Our decadence is proved by our hypocrisy. If you want to insult a person to-day, call him an idealist. Yet we claim we are aiming for peace, the brotherhood of mankind and a recognition of the worth of the individual. Meanwhile, we pile our food surpluses higher and holler "Canada for the Canadians" type of phrases, if "dumping" threatens to share them with those who need them and thus lower our own living standards. In 1939, 38% of the world's people were underfed. To-day, it's 60%.

The percentage of a nation's income which is saved and re-invested, determines its pace of industrialization and thus its living standards. While Russia by ruthless means re-invests 20% and China 10%, India, where democracy is on trial, barely keeps up with the population rise, with 5% re-invested and Indonesia only manages 3.8%. Our democratic world has simply not succeeded like communism has in helping our brother in need.

What madness then that University students, who are to be an example to society, obey the mass impulse with personal expenditures on cigarettes, liquor, trash movies, fashion clothes, unnecessary cars. The millions of dollars they devote to luxuries could provide education for the hundreds of worthy foreign students the Colombo plan must refuse each year because of limited funds.

In this zero hour, it is perhaps still not too late to lead the population, individually and collectively. There are a dozen steps to be taken. Some on your campus, possibly your student paper's staff should initiate petitions to Prime Minister St. Laurent demanding an immediate quadrupling of Colombo plan Aid to $100 million annually by increased taxes if necessary.

But do not as an individual neglect to examine your own Conscience. You must relate your ideals to practical dollars and cents, minutes and hours terms. You must leave that orchestra that fiddles while Rome burns. For you can at least perish at peace with God if you have done your part to stop the flames. The only rational attitude in this H-Bomb age is a pessimism that expects what is really the inevitable, coupled with a desperate individual effort to stem the tide. In that lies the first ray of hope.

Repetitive History

The Editor,
The Varsity.

History has an uncanny and very uncomfortable inclination to repeat itself; and, while each situation is more intricately guised and disfigured than its antecedent, its essential nature cannot be obscured.

In the twilight before the dark years of the Second World War, many were the voices that cried out in its anticipation. Most of these bespoke a foolhardy and optimistic frame of mind, for the "peace in our times" fallacy was much in vogue. The youth of the land clung fervently to the hope that they could live out their lives without lifting a rifle. The truly sad nature of this hope soon became harshly evident.

But all of this happened nearly twenty years ago; we have only to look around us now, and we will see strife upon the earth, continued strife, the like of which was unheard of during the 30's. Two great masses of humanity are forming, and they must do battle. India, Germany, and a few others are still on the fence, but they will soon decide. Paltry issues like the Tachens and Formosa will only be the excuses put forward. Chinese pilots are plunging to their deaths in flaming MIG's, while the brothers of their murderers are rotting in Chinese prisons. And so the diplomats thumb their noses at one another. What Sarajevo will set this one off? It doesn't really matter; important only is the fact that war will come. The Atom bomb, which by now has sunk to the same status as that of the gas attack, frightens no one.

The only course left to us, then, is to stop our Royal Canadian pack-peddling and form en masse behind the United States in her stand against the Red Horde. When the starting gun goes off, we must be ready.

When we look back on those few words of defiance voiced in 1938 by the peoples of this blissful land, do not our hearts swell in the pride that they had pluck enough to utter them, at a time when war was the most fearful prospect in all the experience of man? Let us be among the few who utter such words now. —John T. Harasti

Elders

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Re the current controversy about the proposed O'Keefe's centre, I am reminded of this story which had been handed down to me as supposedly true.

It seems that a woman out in Fort William was keeping a brothel and had grown quite rich at it. One day the elders of one of the local churches decided to build a new church and started to take up a collection. The woman contributed a check for $20,000. The elders, thrown into a state of confusion, held an all-night meeting and in the end sent the check back, explaining that they could not accept the money because of the source it came from. Whereupon this woman sent the check again, assuring them that they did not need to have the slightest worry about the source, because all of the money came from the members of the congregation.

Which only goes to show how silly you can get.

It's a Great Life

Atheist?

After reading in The Varsity the letters occasioned by the St. Mike's-Trinity debate, I am hoping that at least one of the writers can help me to realize a long-standing desire. For some years I have been wanting to meet a real live atheist, who might be willing and able to explain his position to me. I shall never be able to comprehend or appreciate an atheist's outlook without help, for to me, religious faith is as natural and as necessary as breathing.

I would therefore appreciate it if an intelligent and sensible atheist, who can discuss his beliefs without losing his temper, would contact me, so that a little discussion could be arranged. If I receive no reply, I shall have to conclude that there are no atheists on the campus, which would not much surprise me, since, not having met one in almost five years of college, I am driven to advertise a new-paper for one.

Marriage of Figaro

Two of the singers in the 1948 production of the Marriage of Figaro. The opera will again be presented in this year's Opera Festival with singers Mary Morrison and Andrew MacMillan. The sixth season opens Feb. 25 at the Royal Alexandra Theatre.

Last Wednesday the Canadian Music Associates presented a concert of new music, new in the sense that it was, for the most part new to the audience, and also because for most people present it was a new listening experience. All of the music played was written within the last eight years, so we may assume that it was representative of the output of our national culture. For some works, this was a premiere while others have been already accepted into concert repertoire. I think I may safely say that all works were comprehensive, mature and fit for human consumption.

The concert began with a work by Murry Adaskin, Serenade concertante, which had been played previously at a TSO subscription concert. The influences of Milhaud and Stravinsky of the neoclassic school were highly in evidence. It was consistently light and colourful, and carried with it all of the gaiety of the lighter works of Mozart. Francois Morel's Esquisse was next on the program. Insistent and haunting in character, it held its audience well. Morel depleted his forces I felt, for though "Silence is golden", "Idleness is wanton". Those of the radio audience who were unaware that the violas were counting sixty-two bars rest undoubtedly enjoyed this work more.

We have all heard of the work of Godfrey Ridout at one time or another, and the performance of his Cantiones mysticae was similarly enjoyable. Irene Salemkas as soloist, feeling the deep conviction of the music gave a splendid performance. The words, by the mystic Donne, were evenly set to beautiful lyric phrases, underlined by a rich orchestral accompaniment, and punctuated by thrilling climaxes. Symphony by Andrew Twa, an experiment in the use of rhythms as a formal device, was mildly disquieting. Complex in style and complicated in construction, it was unevenly played. The only thing which annoyed me was the use of a cadential formula at the end of the highly contrapuntal last movement. I failed then, as I do now, to perceive its function.

Poetic Suite, by Udo Kasekmets, and sung by Miss Salemkas, failed to move me. It seemed bound up in the forms of the movements and might just have well been performed with far fewer forces than were used. The second movement, an interlude, was quite acceptable using as accompaniment only one cello and one violin. George Brough played an ineffective piano part well under the circumstances. An exchange work from Italy, Due Invenzioni per Orchestra by Adone Zecchi, displayed the most subtle use of the percussion section. It was moving, lyric, and pleasantly passionate.

A concert suite, taken from the ballet Shadow on the Prairie, by Robert Fleming concluded the program. The music showed colour and imagination, two essential ingredients in ballet or film music. The power of the orchestra was felt for the second time, the only other time being the Ridout songs. The brilliant music proved a fitting end to the evening.

The two hundred and sixty-third concert of the Hart House Sunday evening nine o'clocks will be performed by Mary Morrison, soprano, and Andrew MacMillan, baritone.

Mary Morrison came from Winnipeg to Toronto in 1946 as a scholarship student of Dr. Ernesto Vinci at the Royal Conservatory. She has performed with the CBC Opera Company and as a soloist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, at the Bach Festival and with the Mendelssohn Choir.

From Scotland to Montreal to the Canadian Army to Toronto came Andrew MacMillan. He studied voice in Montreal with Finlay Campbell, in Toronto with Dr. Vinci. He has sung leading roles with the Opera Festival, also for the CBC.

Both artists will perform in this year's Opera Festival.

Their program this Sunday evening includes two duets by Mozart, and Italian, French and Scottish songs.

From A Glass House

It occurs to me that The Varsity's staff of writers is singularly gifted in the art of provoking a mild form of hysteria in some of its readers most of the time. Hardly an issue goes by without a blast of protest from a disgruntled reader in the letters column. The issue of February 2nd afforded me the last atoms of provocation necessary to induce me to court frustration by joining the nervous ranks of the letter writers.

On Monday night, sitting in the left front row, whether I had immigrated with the rest of the right half of the audience, I was as impressed by Mr. Gieseking's stern face with its cool, appraising gaze as I was by the sensitivity and skill of his performance. I was therefore quite prepared to be aggravated into raising a hue and cry when I saw the taciturn genius introduced by Mr. Biener as a "jovial old man". I took this to be either a coquettish and silly piece of impudence or a symptom of incompetence on the part of some vital faculty of the reviewer's apprehension of the world about him.

My quarrel, however, does not lie in my differences in opinion or observation with this critic, for in this review in particular, it is rather with the style and attitude of most of the music reviews I have encountered in The Varsity.

Both the prevalent attitude and the accepted style reflect a sort of intellectual syncretism by which the critics draw upon a reservoir of clichés and opinions collected over the years of experience in music criticism. As apparent members of a self-styled intelligentsia of the musically initiated, these critics feel obligated to present a brazen, biased, bored review to the public lest other members of the hierarchy accuse them of vitiated critical objectivity or decadent sentimentality, and the layman fails to appreciate their positions as informed and thoughtful music-lovers. The result is a confused list of remarks which are perfunctory, listless, non-committal and verbose. If they should come up with an original thought, they obscure it with addled syntax and jargon lest they be convicted of apostasy. An excellent example is Mr. Biener's "It is surprising how well Mr. Gieseking applies a basically impressionistic tone technique to the lusters of other ages." A valid thought, but how clumsily, carelessly and pompously phrased!

Which brings me to style. It is admittedly difficult to form a means of describing or discussing music. But the solution cannot be the adoption of a formalistic, arbitrary vocabulary of descriptive terms and phrases which must be defined whenever they are used. These all come under the heading of jargon. Under the by-ways of inexperienced, pompous or hap-hazard critics, they are meaningless both to the layman, who only wants to know "how" the concert was, and to the connoisseur, who is interested in technicalities. The layman is mystified, the connoisseur disgusted.

It seems to me that a little originality, a little enthusiasm, even a little heresy would be refreshing after the diet of inconsequential, guarded reviews dished out by The Varsity's incorruptible staff of dilettantes.

CRITIC IN THE DARK AGES

Moses The Spaniard

So highly does Israel honour her sage Maimonides, that she has likened him to the original Moses, giving him eternal deference in the declaration that "From Moses till Moses none has arisen like unto Moses". This year being the 750th anniversary of his death, Hillel, Jewish student organization on Campus, thought it fitting that their annual dramatic effort be on a Maimonic theme. Their intentions were certainly good, but, in their production of "The Spaniard", they did Rabbi Moses ben Mai-mon little honour.

Among theatre groups, an inverse ratio seems to exist between ambition and experience. Whereas professional groups seem to prefer simple and obvious works, for the amateurs only the very deepest and most involved matter can satisfy. At Hillel the earnest amateurs overstepped themselves.

The Spaniard, presented as a new play by screen-writer Michael Blankfort, comes in a form styled for radio, neither needing nor, in this case, using the stage. The actors walk on stage, give their lines, then retire to a row of chairs at the back. To one side stands the narrator, at a lectern. Blankfort's intention is to review the life of Maimonides through the eyes and hearts of those who stood by and against him in his work. The effect achieved in his approach was one of only a blurry impression, leaving the brilliant personality of "Moses the Spaniard" a cold and vague thing.

Still, vague as the play might be, wanting in any revealing development of the Maimonides character, it has yet enough substance to give a recognizable picturing of the great medieval scholar. A certain lack of familiarity with the subject seemed to hamper the Hillel players in their interpretation of the life of Maimonides. They failed to join the varied facets of his life through their individual speeches, each speaker coming forward to centre stage, on cue, uttering his lines and moving away, the whole thing seeming like a disjointed assembly line of specialists, each concerned only with the single job allotted him.

Other faults in the presentation were needless and trying for the audience. It was annoying, at a tense moment, to see persons fumbling for lines. On the other hand, the effective work done by the three-woman chorus of Corinne Godfrey, Carol Salutin and Annette Oelbaum, was most impressive against the otherwise dull background. Reading and humming in choral background, they added greatly to the meaning of the play.

Experimental use of the Toronto Young Judea Choir and Dance Group, except in certain instances, pleased the family-sized audience. Using songs and dances from camp-fire settings they presented, informally a repertoire of modern Israeli folk music which lacked polish but impressed favourably.

EXPLORING MINDS

The second program in the trilogy on Social Work Education in the CBC television series, Exploring Minds, will be presented on Channel 9 this Sunday at six. The program is entitled "Ten Year Old Teachers".

This Sunday's program will deal with field work of the School of Social Work students at the York Community House of the Toronto Neighbourhood Workers' Association.

Last Week's program "This Man is My Problem" centered around the treatment of an individual case history in the field of social work, tracing a student from the time he entered the school until the time when he was faced with a problem on his own initiative.

The third program done by the School of Social Work in cooperation with the CBC-TV will feature field work at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. It takes place at 6:00 p.m. same time, same station.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

While it is not uncommon for three players from the same team to run one-two-three in the Intercollegiate individual scoring race, it's usually considered different to see those three all playing on the same forward line. Up until last Friday's game, Varsity's big first line of Dave Reid, Paul Knox, and Clare Fisher occupied those positions, but clever Blue centre Don Cossar, and Laval captain Robert Lafreniere erased that situation when they went on a three-goal scoring spree. That is what usually happens, but last season, the now-famous "Punch Line" of the University of Montreal Carabins not only held down all three first spots but set a league scoring record while they were at it.

In twelve league games last season, Claude Dagenais, Bernie Quesnel, and Claude Hotte, who have played together as a unit for the last three Intercollegiate seasons, scored thirty-seven goals, more than half the total Carabin output for the 1953-54 season. Quesnel finished in first place with thirty-eight points, gained through fourteen goals and twenty-four assists. Dagenais was second with thirty points on thirteen goals and seventeen assists, while Hotte held down third position with a mark of ten and nineteen for twenty-nine. That's a total of ninety-seven points for the season, an amazing output for a twelve-game schedule.

It would be a long haul for Varsity's "Punch Line" to equal the mark set by these three stars. With forty-six points now it would seem virtually impossible for them to average four points per man per game to match the record. In the goal-getting department, and after all that's what really counts, they are more than likely to outdo the Carabin aces. Reid, with eleven tallies now, will be sure to pass Quesnel's mark of fourteen; but he has only eight assists, a far cry from Quesnel's twenty-four of last season.

Getting back to those three clever Carabins, the remarkable thing about the ability of this line was that each time one scored a goal, the other two invariably assisted on it. And this was not just a soft spot in the hearts of the hometown referees, for the same thing happened almost as much remember that in one game the line was held scoreless when on the road. The output is even more remarkable when you McGill shut out the Carabins 3-0.

This season the big three started out on the same path to glory in their opening game against Laval. The Carabins edged the Rouge et Or 4-3 in that clash, and Quesnel scored twice, while Hotte and Dagenais got the other two goals. One of Quesnel's goals was a penalty shot, but the rest of the scoring went like this: Quesnel (Hotte, Dagenais), Hotte (Dagenais, Quesnel), and Dagenais (Quesnel, Hotte). That gave them a solid hold on the scoring race at the start of the season, with four points for Quesnel, and three for Hotte and Dagenais.

Unfortunately for the future of the Carabins this winter, and likely quite fortunately for the rest of the teams in the league, Hotte went out for the balance of the schedule with torn ligaments in that game. Quesnel dislocated his shoulder against McGill four weeks ago, leaving Dagenais to carry the load with two green wingers. This blow to the Carabins' scoring power is probably the largest single factor contributing to their decline as Intercollegiate threats this season. Dagenais, playing without his usual linemates, has scored six goals thus far in the season, which is almost half the Carabin output; and has set up three more, for a total of nine points, which puts them in eighth place in the scoring derby.

After this season, the three Carabin marksmen will be broken up for good, with Hotte graduating in the spring from Engineering. Quesnel and Dagenais have yet another season, but it will be difficult to find a player of the quality of Claude Hotte who can team with the remaining two to produce such a fantastic total. Anyone who has ever watched the "Punch Line" in action cannot help but be impressed by the perfection of their teamwork, and the finesse of their play. Such a performance is rarely witnessed in Intercollegiate hockey, although the Blues' first line approaches that mark to a tremendous degree.

It is also unfortunate that the untimely breaking-up of the powerful Carabin trio erases any possibility of one of the most colorful scoring races in years between two of the greatest lines in Intercollegiate hockey. Nothing remains for the Blues' big first line now but to see how close they can come to the record of the three Carabin aces. With Reid's potent scoring ability threatening from left wing, and Knox's from the right, centred by the remarkable play-making ability of Clare Fisher, they might well break out against McGill tonight.

From the Blue Room . . . Kirk Wipper's wrestlers have their toughest competition this season in Hart House Saturday night when they meet Rochester Tech . . . Ice Blues Face Redmen In Crucial Test Tonight

Jack Kennedy's crew of puckmen take to the ice tonight against what is probably the strongest team ever to represent McGill in the Intercollegiate Hockey League. The Blues, with seven league victories behind them, as well as an undefeated streak of twelve games, are likely to run into a real spark of energy when they tangle with the Tribe in tonight's all-important struggle.

McGill, who still have three games in hand over the Blues, will be fighting to stay in the race for the title. A loss tonight would mean virtual elimination for the Redmen, and would just about mean the Queen's Cup for the Blues.

Blue coach Jack Kennedy remains skeptical on the chances of a Varsity win, even though the Blues laced the Redmen 9-1 in their last league meeting before Christmas. Kennedy will remind you that his team scored six goals in the first ten minutes of that game, enough to break any club's back. In addition to this, the Tribe will have Bernie Wong between the pipes, a young man who is supposedly nothing short of sensational. When the Blues last played McGill, Henri Lafleur was in the nets, and Wong has yet to face the lightning teamwork of the powerful Varsity attack.

Kennedy is looking for increased scoring power from all three lines in tonight's game. With the shift in the first line that moves Dave Reid over to left wing, and puts Clare Fisher at centre, Kennedy expects the big three to come out of their scoring slump. The return of John Akit to the second line, will mean added strength to spell the starters, while the third line seems to have sharpened their eyes for the battle with the Tribe.

Tonight will be the night for the Blue defence to shine, with marksmen such as Pete Constable, Gord Currie, and Herb English invading with the Redmen. With stalwarts like Dave Jackson, Dave Stephen, Bill Moreau, Lou Appleby, and John Toiton to cover the Blue-line, the McGill snipers will have trouble getting to Hugh Curry.

Blue Notes . . . Free skating after the game for all of us . . . McGill coach Rocky Robillard is expected to ask the referees to measure Hugh Curry. Word has it he is a quarter of an inch over the league height limit for goaltenders . . . The Green Og is noncommittal.

Ice Seconds Meet Queen's Renewal of Hockey Rivalry

Queen's Intercollegiate hockey team returns to hockey wars at Varsity arena to-day for the first time since they dropped from senior competition in the 49-50 season. At that time the Tricolour, having collected only one win in two seasons, dropped out to be replaced by Laval, Queen's moving to the St. Lawrence loop for competition at the Intermediate level.

The Kingston crew tackle the Varsity Intermediates here this afternoon in the first game of a home and home series calculated as the opening step in the return of Queen's to senior competition. Having dropped a close game to R.M.C., which the hockey Seconds had little trouble handling, and being smothered 5-0 by Western, the visitors' hopes of a step up in the near future seem rather dim.

Coach Weldrake, in a move to launch the Intermediates back on the win trail, has reshuffled two of his three attacking units. The only forward line to escape the move was that of Riley, Rogers, and Rantis, with Ted Rogers at the moment holding down second spot in the team's scoring. Dud Kearney has been shifted from his wing position to centre, Borthwick and Bertram, Naylor moving back to Morrison's line to replace Kearney. This move breaks up the three U.T.S. grads but drops Kearney into the centre slot which he occupied previous to this season.

Boxing, Fencing Meets at McGill

Teams from the University of Toronto will journey to Montreal this week-end for the Intercollegiate tournaments in Boxing and Fencing, with McGill as the host University.

The Blue boxers will fight teams from McGill, Queen's, and OAC in an effort to retain the Gibson Trophy, which they won last year. Representing Varsity in the 130-pound class will be Lowell Keffer, who replaces Dave Setton. Setton injured his hand in last week's University championships.

Five boxers will be returning from last year's championship team. Harold Nightingale and John Whyte, fighting in the 145 and 150-pound classes, were both champions in their weights last winter. Larry Corcoran has moved from the 155-pound division to the 165-pound class, while Pete Young and Bill Clarke again fight in the 135 and 140-pound classes.

Daryl Henry, who defeated Dave Williams in last week's meet, will take Corcoran's place in the 155-pound division, while Charlie Gonsalves will fight at 175 pounds, and John Iglar in the heavyweight class.

A six-man team, coached and managed by University champion John Andru, will take on the lone opposition from McGill in the Intercollegiate Fencing meet.

The team, composed of George Montgomery, Martin Nash, Maurice Husken, Walter O'Neil, Walter Stalmack, and Richard Zeidler, will fight in the three classes of the sabre, foil, and epee, in an effort to win one more Intercollegiate title for the University of Toronto.

Wrestlers Battle Rochester

Rochester Institute of Technology's wrestling team invades Canada on Saturday to engage the University of Toronto matmen, in Hart House. RIT has lost but one meet in its six starts this year, and poses the toughest opposition Varsity will meet this season. Since the Canadian Intercollegiate championship matches, two weeks away, will be held this year at Guelph, Saturday will be the last chance to see the Varsity squad in action at home. Matches will be held at 8.00 p.m. in the lower gym, with no admission charge.

Rochester's loss, its first after a 16 straight win streak was administered by Waynesburg College, which went on to rack-up Ohio State University, and Purdue University. Leading RIT is Jim Modrak, who has won 16 consecutive dual matches and holds the 4-1 tournament 137-pound championship. Other starters are Doug Keeler, 123-lbs., who will meet Varsity's undefeated Wally Kami-Takahara. Pete Witte, 130-lbs., will meet Jack McQuat of Varsity. Gord Stephenson, Varsity, will meet Jim Modrak, while Ray Smith tackles Jim Cargoni, 147-lbs., who has lost but once in 16 matches for RIT. At 157-lbs., Paul Hickey, Varsity, will meet RIT co-captain Gary Dotzler. Orle Loucks, Varsity, will meet Jerry Hopton, 167-lbs., and Bob Waugh, will take on Lou Perriello, RIT, 177-lbs. RIT will enter no-one at 191-lbs., and their heavyweight will tackle Varsity's undefeated veteran of the mats, Harry Robinson.

Irish Gain 3-3 Tie With Skule

By TOM WILLIAMS

Only a last-minute desperation ganging attack, with the goalie on the bench, enabled St. Mike's B to salvage a 3-3 tie with SPS IV, in Group III hockey action, yesterday.

Though the draw clinched second place for the Irish, assuring them of a playoff berth, it was a moral victory for the Engineers. The Skulemen are mired in fourth place in the five team group, having won but one of five previous games. St. Mike's had won five and lost one till yesterday.

However, the game yesterday wasn't played by the form-sheet, and with a little more luck the Engineers might have won more than just moral victory.

Skule led 3-2, with a minute and a half remaining, when a faceoff in their zone enabled the Irish to bench their goalie for an extra attacker. The strategy paid off, when Bulanda scored his second of the game, fifteen seconds before the end.

In the first period, St. Mike's grabbed an early two goal lead as Bulanda and Rawley put the puck past a shaky Selby, in the Skule nets. However, after this jittery start, the Engineers' goalie shut the door till the last-minute dramatics.

Late in the first period, Holland started Skule on their way with a screened bullet off the left post into the net.

In the second stanza, with Selby holding the Irish at bay, Champ bagged two to give the Engineers the lead and set the stage for the heroic finale.

The score, as the saying goes, was not indicative of the play. St. Mike's had a definite territorial edge, out-shooting the Engineers by a wide margin. But they couldn't beat Selby who made some sensational saves, notably on Kennedy and Moreau.

The Irish contributed to their own poor showing, blowing several excellent chances through erratic shooting. Skule, on the other hand, capitalized on their relatively few chances.

Wednesday's action was limited to one game, in which U.C. III blasted SPS VI, 7-2. Banks and Wansborough led the Red, with two each. Nadin, Scott and Passmore added the others. For the undermanned Engineers (six players), Mann and Quartz were the marksmen.

Short Shots . . . Word has it that the recent scheduling of Interfaculty games at 8.00 a.m. is not an attempt to complete the schedule on schedule, as the Intramural office alleges, but is in reality part of an insidious plan to rob honest sportswriters of their just quota of sleep. Comment from the hockey writers: much as we'd like to, we won't take this lying down.

Blues Visit Western, Assumption Decisive Games Now Looming

Varsity's Basketball Blues venture into the territory of those fierce Western Mustangs and the powerful Purple Raiders of Assumption College tonight and tomorrow, facing a severe, and possibly conclusive test of their strength. The Assumptions' and the Westerns' are the two best known quantities in the Intercollegiate League this season, reigning as co-champions and having improved teams over those that won them that title last season. Varsity Blues, built of top-flight men, but an uncertain quantity as team-unit, match their opponents in the record book, but the important question, to be answered in the next two days, is whether they have as good a team.

With a starting lineup well over the six foot mark the Western Mustangs have already been picked by such schools as McMaster to win the whole deal this time, with Varsity coming a respectable second. Taking the teams player by player, though, the only edge that can be allowed the Mustangs is their extra height, while the Blues are certainly a faster, better-shooting club. Mustangs also are likely to have a defensive edge on the Blues who this year have shown no particular aptness for this kind of work.

A well-balanced team are the Assumptions, with a starting lineup not so tall as the Mustangs but as big as the Blues and a much better balanced team unit. Veteran Lou Veres, the American star who has been the Raiders' top man for the past three seasons is the wise man of the club, while flash and spectacular play is the hallmark of one George Joseph, another American import who last year played great ball in every game, but the home game in Toronto. Toronto St. Mike's grad, Hugh Coyle is possibly the most valuable man the Raiders have. Not glory-happy, shooting only when he can't give the ball to Joseph. Coyle was the outstanding Assumption player here last year and seems to be doing as well this year. Ray Triano who starred at Niagara with Pete Potter is another Purple Raider who could give the Blues much trouble, but is an uncertain starter, having done nothing in the past two games. Rumburs of dissension on the Assumption club have made them a big question-mark in the league, but after dropping two games on the road they seem to have settled away and are now bearing down for the championship, making no mistakes and playing it steady.

For the Blues this is the big test. A club of stars they have yet to perform as a unit for more than half a game. The last time they showed a united strength was against the Blue Devils of Lawrence Tech, since then winning games on sheer shooting accuracy and ability to play a sort of scramble ball. The score after this weekend looks to be a victory and a defeat for the Blues, with the Mustangs taking the win and the Raiders the defeat. However, with their potential, the Blues could surprise the League and a double-victory for Varsity is not at all unlikely.

Still Messrs. Chris Ellis, Coulter Osbourne, Walt Karabin, Ray Monnott, and friends will have to be shown some outstanding ball-playing before they will quit and be beaten.

WUS Has Japan Summer Seminar Two Varsity Students To Attend

Wednesday night the Students' Administrative Council ratified the sending of two University of Toronto students on the 1955 World University Service summer seminar program.

Applications for the summer program are now open, and forms can be picked up in the SAC office. "The deadline is February 25, for submitting applications," announced Ron Gould, co-chairman of the Toronto WUS committee. "They should be picked up as soon as possible, because the applicants also have to get pictures and references," he emphasized.

This year, the summer seminar will be held in Japan. As well, there will be study tours in West Africa and the West Indies. A student applying, would mark on his form his choices, one, two, and three. "If possible, we'll give them their first choice," said Gould.

The SAC has approved the following people for the selection committee: the President of the University of Toronto, or his representative E. A. Macdonald (secretary-treasurer of the SAC), Warden McCulley, Dr. Jim Ham, Bill Angus, Jane Farquharson, and Ron Gould.

The selection committee, in considering applicants, will take into account overall ability, general impression produced, and achievements both in academic and extra-curricular work on the campus, Gould said.

On the student's return, he will be expected to communicate his experience to his fellow students and members of the community, said Gould. This can be done by writing articles for the university and other newspapers, and by speaking at public meetings. A student chosen for the seminar must also be willing to participate in the work of WUS on his own campus when he returns.

Preference will be given, announced Gould, to senior students within one year of graduation, or to recent graduates. It would be understood, he said, that anyone chosen would be returning to a Canadian university for at least another year of study.

Students who are selected, Gould said, will be required to pay $300 towards the summer program. This goes towards travel and incidental expenses. The total cost of the WUS summer program is $70,000.

"Definitely no money from the SHARE campaign goes into sending scholars overseas," Gould emphasized. "All the SHARE funds go into relief work!" he added.

Brookings, S. Dakota. — We knew somebody, somehow, somewhere, would come up with a perfect solution to the campus parking problem which plagues college students and campus cops across the nation. Dennis Kryzaniak, instructor in chemistry at South Dakota State College at Brookings, offers these solutions:

- (1) Paint the tires the same colour as the campus policeman's chalk.
- (2) Coat tires freely with concentrated HCl, which will react with chalk, producing carbon dioxide and water.
- (3) Purchase tireless cars.
- (4) Obey the committee's current parking regulations in hopes that their research will bring us more modern modes of transportation, such as space belts, short range rocket projectiles, etc.

Boulder, Colo. — The question of the teaching of evolution is headed for the state legislature, the Colorado Daily reports. Rev. Gladden William James, head of the Foundation for the Authenticity of the Bible and for Religious Liberty, has presented to a state representative a resolution seeking to ban the teaching of evolution in state-supported schools.

The basis of the James Resolution comes from the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, dealing with separation of church and state powers. When asked whether he considered the teaching of evolution a subject of religious nature, Rev. James said, "I certainly do. The teaching of evolution is a question of religion; it is not one of science."

"If we don't get legislative support," Rev. James added, "we will submit an initiative to the people of the state, and try to push across" an amendment to the Colorado constitution banning the teaching of evolution.

"However," he concluded, "we don't mind having books by Darwin and the other evolutionists in the library, because that is following the idea of freedom of speech and the press."

Ice Blues Whitewash McGill 4-0 Only One Game Away From Title

By JOHN WILSON

Frustrated for two periods by the agile netminding of McGill goaltender Bernie Wong, the Varsity Blues finally burst through for four goals in the first ten minutes of the third period of Friday's game, to subdue the Redmen 4-0. Outstanding display of the night was the smooth work of the Blue defence, who allowed the McGill marksmen only thirteen shots on Hugh Curry, all of which he handled with ease to earn his first shutout of the current intercollegiate season.

Before nearly 2,500 fans in Varsity Arena, the Tribe kept themselves in the picture for two complete periods, mostly through the work of Wong, who thwarted Blue thrusts with seeming nonchalance, while the hard-working line of Pete Constable, Jack McMullen, and Gord Currie kept hammering the Blue defence.

Then seconds after the opening of the third frame, Clare Fisher broke in from the face-off and missed the net. Jackson picked up the loose puck and missed again, and finally Knox picked the upper left hand corner with Wong out of his net on the ice. Knox's goal was typical of the frustration that had kept the Blues scoreless throughout the first two stanzas. It took three tries for the big first line to finally break into the scoring column after a two-game slump.

Not to be denied now, the Blues made it 2-0 as Ross Woods swept in from left wing to beat the McGill defence and Wong with a low, hard shot at 2:18. Stephen made it 3-0 at 8:47, after starting in his own end, getting assistance from Fisher and Reid, and squeezing through two bodychecks to end up on top of Wong. Dave Reid slammed in the last one at 9:43 after several tries, to culmi-

Slider Reider

Clever McGill goaltender Bernie Wong foils Varsity's Dave Reid on this close-in attempt in Friday's intercollegiate fixture at Varsity Arena. McGill captain Herb English sprawls on the ice to trap the puck behind Reid, while Pete Constable moves towards the camera waiting for the pass. Moments later Reid popped in his twelfth goal of the season as the Blues defeated the Redmen 4-0. —VSP by Ed Hoshkiw nate one of his best games this season.

The first line, newly shuffled this week in an effort to obtain more scoring punch, appeared to be a little uncomfortable as a unit. All their shooting eyes were off, and they missed countless chances in the opening two periods. The second line played its usual steady game, while the third line worked like slaves but remained scoreless for the fifth consecutive time.

Apart from the sterling performance of Bernie Wong in the McGill nets, the work of Jamie Robertson and John Henderson on defence was outstanding. Constable and Currie, and Dick Baltzan kept McGill hopes alive up front for the first two periods, but flagged noticeably in the final frame. Curry had little work to do in the Varsity goal to preserve his shut-out, but handle dangerous shots coolly. Contrasted to him was the protection given Wong by a shaky McGill defence.

The Blues appeared unable to get started in the second period with three penalties slowing them down in the last half. The first frame was dull with both teams looking for weaknesses and finding none. McGill's apparently lay in poorer condition than the Blues, which became obvious in the third period when the Blues outshot them 16-2

Now comfortably in front of the Tribe by nine points, the Blues need only win one of their remaining two games with McGill to be sure of the championship. This week-end the Blues meet the Redmen Friday night

Hamilton (CUP) — No bills are to be paid McMaster student organizations to the building and grounds department until further notice. This measure was voted unanimously in a specially called secret session of the students' council on Tuesday morning.

Immediate cause of this drastic step, which climaxes a long record of dissatisfaction with the "petty bureaucracy" of the buildings and grounds department, was the news that the women's student body would be charged two hundred dollars for removing the bleachers in the university gym for their Wonderland Ball.

The announcement burst like a bombshell on the student executive a few days before the dance was scheduled. Authorization for the dance had been received months before. No charge has ever been levied against any student organization for this service.

Although dissatisfaction with the department is widespread, the news was not generally broadcast until Friday, when the Silhouette reported the episode in its lead story. This silence was imposed to avoid a chaotic confusion of rumors before the paper could give the important facts to the student body.

The morning following the decision to withhold payments, a delegation of twelve students, including the heads of the most important student organizations on the campus, presented a 1,500 word brief to the emergency executive council, the supreme authority of the university during the absence of the president. President Gilmour is taking a rest cure in South Africa and is not expected back till the middle of March.

Latest information is that the resolution and brief are regarded by the council as sincere and serious protests against an apparently unsatisfactory situation and are being considered as such on the highest levels.

Apes In Simcoe Hall Show Uses of Biology

Sometimes even monkeys wish to come to college! But U of T officials decided to refuse the application of one such animal — more precisely, a stuffed ape — when he appeared in Simcoe Hall last week, clutching a placard advertising the Biology Club Conversation. In fact, University officials bodily ejected their distinguished visitor and advised him never to return.

When even the apes become conscious of campus affairs, such as this Conversat, it is high time the students should know about them.

The Biology Club are holding their Conversat this year on February 18, 19 and 20. Displays will be restricted to Zoology this year, for the Club hopes to hold a Botany Conversat in 1957.

In case you are not familiar with Biology Conversats, they are displays for the laymen of the work of the Department of Zoology. The undergraduates are preparing the exhibits to demonstrate Comparative anatomy, Embryology, Histology, Neurology, Genetics, Human biology, Invertebrate Zoology, Physiology, Wildlife management and fisheries. Some films will also be shown.

The purpose of this exhibition is to interest the public in the subject matter and value of Biology. The show will take place in the Department of Zoology, Biological Building (the second building on the west side of Queen's Park, north of College Street). The doors will be open on Friday, February 18 (7:30 - 10:30 p.m.), Saturday, February 19 (10:30 a.m. - 7:00 p.m.) and Sunday, February 20 (2:00 - 5:00 p.m.). There will be no admission charge, and everyone is welcome.

Room Converted For UC Movies

A sound-proof movie and music room is soon to be undertaken in University College, it was stated last week by a faculty member.

The room — room 6 — has already been in use as a lantern-slide and movie room but has not been fully equipped for this function.

M. Sanouillet, a member of the French department of the college, said that when the room is completed, it would be furnished with regular theatre seats, window drapes and low-powered lighting.

Mr. Sanouillet said that some of the sound-proofing had already been completed and that cost of remodelling the room was being undertaken by the college.

The French Cine Club — an undergraduate organization — has provided the movie projection equipment, it was stated.

Carabins Plod Weary Way Homeward Heavy Toll On Weekend Formidable

The Carabin week-end was a success. Or that is the opinion of the 35 people who returned singing songs — French songs — about 10 p.m. last night. Five liked it so well at the University of Montreal that they didn't return.

Here are some of the comments on the visit: a riotous time . . . not two minutes to rest . . . indeed eight hours to sleep the whole week-end . . . climbed 146 steps to reach the University . . . indeed my week-end formidable . . . going back by hook or by crook . . . increased my song repertoire tremendously . . . the French-Canadian men are so gallant . . . a most rewarding discussion.

The schedule for the week-end ran from 10 p.m. Thursday night when the 40 Toronto visitors were welcomed by the rector of the U of M to a tea at 3 p.m. on Sunday.

After the Rector's welcome, a tour of the city was arranged until about one o'clock. Bright and early at eleven next morning the group of eighty students went by bus to Mont Gabrielle in the Laurentians for a day of skiing. It is reported that one Toronto student took two hours to ski down a hill that everyone else managed in ten minutes. There just isn't enough snow to practice in Ontario.

At four o'clock Friday came dinner, followed by a party which lasted until "just about midnight." Then the group went ed their happy way back to Montreal for a night at their individual hosts' houses.

On Saturday came the discussion: What is a Canadian? This included such ideas as the definition of a Canadian mentality. One girl described the discussion as the most illuminating that she had ever had. Later that afternoon, the group set out for L'Isle de Ste. Helene, where the Montreal council was explained to them and opinions of the Carabin week-ends and what they achieve were expressed.

Saturday night, the group heard the Leslie Bell singers, followed by "une espece d'une maniere d'une partie", which the singers attended themselves. One fellow told of Dr. Leslie Bell leading his own group and the Toronto visitors as they proceeded by bus to la partie.

On Sunday everyone went to mass at 10:30 and then to lunch at the hosts' houses. After the tea, the group rushed to the station to find the train didn't leave at 4 p.m. but at 3:30. This perhaps explains why five people failed to come back, but someone stated that "they could have made the train if they'd really wanted to."

Heated discussions and French songs were predominant on the train going home. But the noise was silenced when one chap belted out in the middle of a spiced ditty, "Has anyone a copy of Hobhouse's Liberalism?"

Student Day of Prayer

February 14-20 is World Student Christian Federation Week, culminating in the Universal Day of Prayer for Students on February 20th. The W.S.C.F. unites Christian students in fifty-six countries through local Student Christian Movements.

The Student Christian Movement on this campus is celebrating W.S.C.F. Week with a special "Federation Night" on February 16th at the S.C.M. House. Gunter Kramer of Germany and Rev. K. I. Koshy of India will speak on the problems confronting students in their native lands. The S.C.M. is also making arrangements with city churches to celebrate the Universal Day of Prayer for Students.

Special projects, undertaken this past year by the Canadian

S.C.M. in cooperation with the W.S.C.F., have been the bringing of three Koreans and two Indians to Canada to study under S.C.M. sponsorship and the arranging of an exchange whereby three Germans are studying here and three Canadians in Germany.

Lutheran Students to Get Minister

The Reverend F. A. Gwmz was installed as Lutheran Minister to Students at 7:30 P.M. last night. The installation ceremony was performed at St. John's Church, 274 Concord Ave. Among the dignitaries who participated was the Reverend Doctor Hahn of Chicago, Executive Secretary of the Lutheran Student Service Commission.

Mr. Gwmz received his pre-theological training at Concordia College, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and his theological training at Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, Mo. During World War II, he served under Lord Louis Mountbatten as chaplain of the Mars Task Force in Burma. Prior to his coming to Toronto, Mr. Gwmz held the position of Minister to Students at the University of Arkansas. Among the universities at which Pastor Gwmz has done graduate work are Washington, Harvard, Creighton, Nebraska, and Arkansas. Mr. Gwmz holds the degrees of B.A. (Concordia), B.D. Race Problem

"I am just a Carpenter who thinks that God created all people of one blood, and meant that they should live as brothers." So says Hugh Burnette, secretary of the National Unity Association, an organization to improve race relations in Canada. At 1 p.m. in Rm. 5 of U.C., Mr. Burnette will discuss the Dresden race problem.

Hindu Swami To Address VCSU

Swami Akhilananda, a noted Hindu guru and teacher, will address the Victoria Church Students Union in Alumni Hall, this evening at 8 P.M. His subject will be "A Hindu Views Christianity".

Swami Akhilananda is a monk who came to the United States 28 years ago and established Vedanta societies in Providence, Rhode Island, and in Boston.

Vedanta is based on the philosophy of the ancient Hindu scriptures. In its modern interpretation, through Ramakrishna (1836-1886), it emphasizes the universality and equality of all religions of the world.

Swami Akhilananda is an accomplished scholar of the historic religions.

Vic Elections Tomorrow, Eng. Society Going Strong

Unusually strong interest is being shown this year in the Engineering Society elections to be held Friday. Already almost sixty nominations have been received and the number is expected to climb near a hundred before nominations close at 5 o'clock to-night. This is far beyond normal proportions — last year there were 44 nominations.

Election activity is attributed to the increased attention focussed on the Engineering Society all year, to intense efforts during the last six weeks to raise interest in the elections and to the fact that three groups have what amounts to fully-organized slates.

If nominations are any indication the voting turnout on Friday should be the best on record, possibly 75%. Largest turnout so far has been 62%; last year it was 52%. Said Engineering Society president Jack Rossall "Things are looking up. I'm pleased the fellows are taking an interest."

The elections for Victoria College Union executive positions will take place tomorrow, Feb. 15. Presidential candidates are Carl Anderson, Fred Caloren and Don Stevenson. A closely-contested three-way fight is expected for this position.

Nominations closed last Thursday. The following people obtained office by acclamation: Ann Lindsay, Associate President; Dick Newman, Vice President; Don Hewgill, Men's Athletic Director; Bud Newberry, Social Director; and Fran Wylie, Women's EAC rep.

Election speeches will be given today at 1:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Nominees for the other executive posts are:

Treasurer: Hunter Brown, Colin Graham
Secretary: Elizabeth Langford, Marilyn Shaw
Publicity Director: Ted Bowen, Greg Hawkins

Women's Athletic Directress: Lil Doidge, Mary Foster
Social Directress: Sandra Brown, Mary Lou Hendershot
Men's SAC rep: John Burbidge, Bruce Stewart

Women's SAC rep: Eleanor Burton, Donna Lough, Mary Lou Nash

Men's EAC rep: Dick Verity, Bill Ward.

Sunshine Town Cut-rate Seats

Special student rates will be available at the Royal Alex this Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday matinee and evening performances. The production will be Sunshine Town, a dramatization of Stephen Leacock's book, Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town.

This is a continuation of the Blue and White Society's policy of furthering artistic appreciation. By an agreement with The Royal Alex, students by presenting their ATL cards can see the performances at reduced rates.

Thermometer Gives Totals As SHARE Canvassing Starts

The SHARE campaign on the Toronto campus opens today, as an estimated 500 canvassers go to work collecting the funds toward the construction of the Patna Health Centre, SHARE chairman Barry Cooke said, "I hope that we can exceed last year's wonderful spirit, and make the Patna students feel that we are their friends."

"Evidence that last year's campaign was appreciated, is seen in the letter from Dr. Zakir Husain of Muslim University," said Cooke. In the letter, Dr. Husain expressed his appreciation with "I cannot adequately thank you on behalf of the India Committee of WUS for this valuable gift and for the kindness and understanding behind it. Nothing, perhaps, helps more to bring the different peoples of the world together than working for common enterprises."

The letter went on; "Please convey my most sincere thanks for the efforts to bring about closer cooperation between our two countries."

The objective of the SHARE campaign this year is $6,000. A thermometer in front of the SAC building will record the progress the campaign makes in its two

Will Try To Pry Canada From Muddy Middle Seat

"In International Affairs, Canada is Stuck in the Middle" will be the House's resolution at the Hart House debate this Wednesday night. Morley Marks, SPS, and Tom Hammond, III U.C. will take the affirmative argument; Peter Martin, III U.C. and Peter Russell, IV Trinity will try to pull Canada out of the mud.

The honorary visitor will be Edgar McGinnis, author of the secondary school text "North America and the Modern World". Hammond defended the resolution with "Canada's traditional role is the lynch-pin between Great Britain and the United States, a completely inadequate position in the present world situation. Canada is neither independent nor distinctive and can therefore only be viewed as inexorably stuck."

Peter Martin, arguing for the negative said: "Canada is in the forefront, not the middle . . . and even if she were in the middle she would be there because of sanity and foresight, not because she was stuck."

The debate will begin at 8:00.

Graduates In Brief

It was recommended at Wednesday's SAC meeting "that full-time students enrolled in the School of Graduate Studies pay the annual Students' Administrative Council fee of $5.00, with certain exceptions and conditions provided for."

Following is a condensation of the brief from SAC to be presented to the President and the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto.

Statutory and Constitutional Provisions:

Both the University of Toronto Act, 1947, and the Constitution of the SAC give the Council legal precedent for including all colleges, faculties, schools and departments in the Council and to levy a compulsory fee on the students.

Graduate Membership in the SAC

(1) At present, Graduate Students freely and actively take advantage of Council Services and activities, making no financial contribution in return. They receive The Varsity, utilize the SAC Housing and Employment Services, participate in Carabin weekends, are members of the Orchestra, Chorus and Band, obtain Torontonensis and the Handbook, and participate in debating tours and tournaments sponsored and run by the Council.

(2) Many graduate students are already within the Council: O.C.E., Emmanuel, Knox, Wycliffe, School of Law and School of Social Work. Meds students in their senior years are in a similar position.

(3) The U of T Act makes provision for all students to participate in a representative committee. Graduate Students should be recognized through the existing official channels as contemplated by the Act.

(4) Membership in the Council would not interfere with the Graduate Students' Union. One student from the School of Graduate Studies would sit on the Council.

(5) In 1952-53 the Graduate Students voted 215-153 for membership in the Council.

Financial Considerations:

(1) This present year, the Council was forced to curtail a number of its activities and the financial position of the Council remains precarious. If the Council is to maintain its present scope of activities and services, a source of increased revenue must be found.

(2) The immediate financial needs of the Council would be satisfied by including the Graduate Students on an exactly similar basis as their membership in Hart House. Full-time Graduate Students would pay the standard Council fee of $5.00.

(3) If these recommendations are authorized by the Board, the financial position of the Council will be secured for years to come.

Recommendation:

Commencing in 1955-56, all full-time students enrolled in the School of Graduate Studies will pay $5.00 annually to SAC. Students enrolled prior to 1955-56 will not pay the SAC fee.

Issues

There will be nine more issues of The Varsity: Wed. and Friday of this week, Monday, Feb. 21, Wednesday, Feb. 23, Friday, Feb. 25, Monday, Feb. 28, Thursday, March 3, and Wednesday, March 9.

Suffocation

One very pressing danger on this campus, as on so many other university's, is that the pressure of joining and belonging will eventually submerge the whole university population in a morass of conformity.

That there should exist outlets on campus for certain legitimate, and even illegitimate activities, is acceptable, but that great numbers of students should be pressured into participation in activities for which they are inclined neither by interest or training, is evidence of a canker harboured in the bosom of the university.

At the present time, 170 officially recognized clubs, societies and associations exist on this campus. It is certain that many of these are duplicating effort, and that many are existing only through sheer inertia.

While any student should be free at a university to follow the command of his interests, the weight of organized and formalized social and extra-curricular activity, has grown to overpowering proportions at this university.

It is becoming increasingly impossible for the student who wishes to do nothing, or at least not to participate in such a spate of 'joining' as has become characteristic of many university students, to be left free to follow his own devices.

We have succeeded not in increasing the creative productivity of the campus but rather in multiplying vices, and suffocating spontaneity.

Strangulation

In sad comparison with the number of organizations for the students on this campus, is their insipid quality.

For example, the political clubs are practically voiceless. It is possible that they conceive of their role either in terms of preparation of the individual for participation in provincial or national politics, or as mutual backslapping clubs for the edification of the "in-group". Whatever their attitude may be it is clear that they have either nothing to say or no way to say it.

Religious clubs are open to practically the same sort of charges. It is possible that they are so concerned with citizenship hereafter that they have no time or interest in the present.

As for student government, there is little to be added to what has already been written in these pages. However, the prospects of so many "gutless wonders", littering up the campus, without possibility of improvement is dismal.

These abortions, particularly the august Students' Administrative Council, are afflicted with poison from without and dry rot from within. As long as the official circles retain their stranglehold, and inner passivity holds sway, there is little possibility that student government on this campus will attain a position commensurate with this university's stature.

Problems of Mass Education

By GEORGE W. BANCROFT

Staff members and students held a week-end seminar at Caledon Farms on the subject "Education for What?" The group whose deliberations this article reports considered some of the issues involved in providing education for the masses.

Education for Making a Living

It was necessary to distinguish between education for making a living and education for living. The swelling tide of persons demanding education, raises two serious problems: first, providing sufficient places in schools to cope with the influx, and secondly, creating places in society to absorb the educated potential. The problem is one of social control and direction through education. For instance, should the educational system channel the human resources to offset the dearth of unskilled labour in a country? Perhaps, the way to ensure a place in society for the educated is to have technological and industrial development keep pace with educational development.

Education for Living

It is claimed that in one country, unemployment among engineers is high, and qualified engineers accept jobs as bus drivers. Suppose both occupations paid similar salaries, would the engineer-bus-driver feel his university education was not a total loss, since he is serving the needs of the community? Perhaps, education for living demands, above all, the cultivation of a sense of service to the community. Today, vocational guidance fails in the schools, because it does not or cannot come to grips with the problem of deriving a sense of happiness from service.

Education and Power Groups

Power groups influence the educational system in the light of what they consider the needs of the community to be. The crucial issue is to recognize those interests which constitute the source of power. Dewey sees the masses as having the power — a fact that must be recognized and provided for. This means that the masses would determine the system of education needed. It is equally possible that in a society there are several power groups which, by contending with each other, provide the social dynamic.

If the masses have the power, should they be exposed through education to ideas which although they may be worth communicating, may lead to social disruption? Some persons think that the majority of the people going through university believe in the ongoing progress of society; but the university, explicitly or implicitly, stifles the interests of social stability the lively curiosity which the masses bring into its lecture-rooms. Others suggest that persons go to university, because they hope the better to qualify themselves to fit into a pattern of conformity. One wonders if they do not, thereby, deny themselves the sense of creative freedom by means of which to cope with the vital changes taking place in society to-day.

Mass Education and Mass Taste

While the masses have a right to education, we need to beware of the dangers of mass taste and mediocrity. Education should therefore be selective both in terms of whom it selects and what it selects as its subject matter. There must be barriers to mass education. But these barriers must be erected in terms of the aptitudes and abilities of the individuals and determined by the enlightened or educated masses themselves — and not by specific power groups.

Education of an Elite

The maximum education of the masses will lead to rapid social changes. But social stability is also of primary importance. Those elements of the social experience that will preserve this stability must be selected. In view of this fact, should not a special group, capable of seeing the continuity of society, and not unsympathetic to the aspirations of the masses, be given a special type of education that equips them to safeguard the social heritage? The panel differed most widely on this question. Some would dispense altogether with the elite, its private schools and aristocratic education. Others would recognize their existence and give them credit for the good they render society. But their members must be drawn from more varied backgrounds, and they must justify their existence as an elite only by what they do for the common social good and not by the extent to which they serve their own narrow interests.

Mass Education and International Understanding was not specifically discussed, but it underlay the proceedings of the entire weekend. No one could have left Caledon without a healthy respect of the other man's point of view, and way of life.

our readers write:

Hard-Working Staffers Don't Get Breaks

While I am not against the worthwhile aspects of The Varsity being made known to the general public through the means of the downtown papers, I do object to the cheap commercialism which marked the Weekend Tely's superficial poke into the offices of our underground daily, this week.

Those long, thin strips of papers were distributed by Varsity staffers at the request of the Tely. They advertised, "See 3 page picture story on Pat Moser in tomorrow's Weekend Tely." What price glory, Mr. Editor?

A front-page story on that issue of Weekend appeared in Friday's Varsity explaining where you could buy copies for the next week. Hart House and the Bookstore have never carried Weekend all week before. How low can you stoop to sell magazines?

That front-page story, by the way, was the first that "reporter Moser" has done for The Varsity in some time. Not that I want to cast any reflections on Pat Moser, but I don't feel she was a logical choice to be featured.

Those who were giving information to the author of that article and his photographer, should have seen to it that someone with more hard work invested in the paper receive the laurels of the article.

No doubt, this will help sell a few copies. For that, I am truly sorry.

Unfortunate? Yes, it's unfortunate. But the milk has been spilled and the only defense which can be taken to insure this fiasco not happening again, rests with the SAC.

They should specify that the Varsity should enter into no deals, business or otherwise, which will give sales of any off-campus product a boost. The "downtown" should be made to see that they don't deal as with cheap, inaccurate articles and then turn around and expect to have the Varsity help them sell their papers.

The Varsity itself should not let itself be sold so cheaply. You could have seen to it that one of your regular, hard-working staffers got a break.

HEATHER ON THE HILL

"Go-Go" Sokolec dances as Jeanie in a rehearsal of BRIGADOON which is being put on by the music clubs of St. Michael's and University College. The show opens to-day in Hart House and plays all this week.

The musical fantasy "Brigadoon" goes on at Hart House, Feb. 14 - 19 under the joint auspices of University College and St. Michael's College. Working on this play is a production staff and cast of over 70 from eight faculties of the University of Toronto.

Brigadoon has been specially adapted to the Hart House stage by Leon Major, the director of the musical. Norman Griesdorf, the producer is assisted by Donna Heineman, associate producer, Wally Russell, stage manager, and Bill Santor, musical director.

Brigadoon as a stage musical won the New York Critics' Circle Award and had a two and a half year run in New York and later repeated its successes in England and Scotland. The play, book and lyrics are by Alan Jay Lerner and the music was written by Frederick Loewe.

Its story, a blend of fantasy and reality, tells of a Scottish village which rises out of the Highland mists one day in each century. The plot is concerned with how the spell of Brigadoon affects two Americans who enter the village.

Mr. Lundie, the school-master of the village, who is played by Dave Duns-muir, states the theme of this romance: "when ye love someone deeply anythin' is possible, even miracles." Dan McCarthy as Tommy, the idealistic American, and Michael Carr playing Jeff, his more cynical friend, discover this slowly as they learn the secret behind Brigadoon. Lotys Munroe as Fiona, and Marilyn Salter as Meg are their respective romantic partners. As Jeanie, sister of Fiona, Gloria Sokolec has the famous Come to Me, Bend to Me solo dance, with new choreography by Terry Johnson; and Jerry Epstein plays her willing fiancé. Douglas Stewart is handling the role of Harry Beaton, who adds to the complications, and raises the questions that carry Brigadoon so far beyond the average musical comedy.

UC and St. Michael's stressed that the production was open to students from any faculty of the University not having a musical show of its own at this time of year. Brigadoon now has representatives from eight faculties: University College, St. Michael's College, Victoria College, Trinity College, the School of Physical and Occupational Therapy, the School of Practical Science, the School of Nursing and the School of Physical Education.

Almost half the cast of Brigadoon is Toronto; but the other members hail from all over Canada as well as the U.S. and the British Isles.

Boyd Neel, C.B.E., B.A. Cantab.

Campus Profile

By MICHAEL McMORDIE

"The whole orchestral situation ought to be reviewed, the economics looked at. The professional musicians are so disorganized. The situation is chaotic." So went Dr. Boyd Neel on the orchestral situation in Toronto. He mentioned in particular the Hart House Orchestra Associates concert on the twenty-seventh of this month. The concert time had been changed from nine to eight-thirty because the only time the musicians could rehearse for the opera festival was at ten that night. He asked Canadian musicians in England why they left home; no work at home they said. Now in Canada he can't get musicians — they are so busy. Dr. Neel's word, for himself and the situation: "Confused".

Nonetheless Dr. Neel likes working in Toronto "very much". Does he like working with Canadian musicians? Again very much, — of course he always has. In England "I knew dozens of fine Canadians". At one time nine were in the famous Boyd Neel Orchestra.

Some famous Englishmen have made the switch from the practical professions; Somerset Maugham and Nevil Shute come to mind. Dr. Neel is another. He is a graduate of the Cambridge University of Medicine. In 1934 he abandoned medicine for music and in the years following established himself as one of Britain's leading musicians. His reputation is for good leadership; his orchestra, the Boyd Neel Orchestra, was one of the world's finest. He has also conducted the Sadler's Wells Opera Company, and the D'Oyle Carte Opera Company in addition to his work as a symphonic conductor. In Canada he has conducted the C.B.C. Symphony and will conduct the TSO this week. After twenty-one years of touring he arrived in Canada in 1953 to settle down as Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music, successor to Sir Ernest MacMillan.

His settled state involves considerable activity. Notably he has organized the Hart House Orchestra, a new string orchestra perpetuating the name of the world famous Hart House Quartet. This orchestra is to provide an attractive outlet for top Canadian talent, also bring live music to some of the smaller Canadian centres, and possibly most important to eventually establish on the campus a regular series of concerts. It sounds good both in theory and, after the first concerts, in practice.

In order to make the last purpose reality the Hart House Orchestra Associates were recently formed. To create a unified orchestra in this busy city it is necessary to guarantee the musicians commitments. The Associates are formed for the purpose of administering a series of concerts such as would provide these commitments. Dr. Neel is going to have a chance to feed the interest and enthusiasm he finds here for music.

The Roving Mind

TV Explores Social Work

"They were teaching me" said a young social work student with some surprise after expecting to show his group of ten-year-olds a thing or two. This week's Exploring Minds program recounts the problems faced in working with children who are either too belligerent or too shy to get along well with their fellows.

Again the University of Toronto department of Social Work in co-operation with CBC-TV has produced an excellent program, both clear and interesting. In the form of a play seen from the point of view of the student the roving mind explores the problem of helping children to find security through the acceptance and understanding of the worker. Peter Finley approaches his group of "Eagles" prepared to sell them on himself, and too worried about his own performance to be observant of the needs of the boys.

As he makes his reports and discusses them with his advisor he realizes that he needs to adjust his own mind before he can think of teaching them to adjust to one another. The scenes where he is dealing with the boys alternate with the scenes of discussion in which the implications of his experiences are worked out. This was a very effective method, but became a little laboured when the script called for Finley to appear ignorant of events that he had experienced and noticed in his reports so that his tutor could talk on the subject. At this time the discussion became a little self-conscious, perhaps due partly to the flat delivery of Finley.

Another effective bit of camera work was the alternation of the individual boys' faces with the tutor's while he talked about the basic needs of humans for acceptance, love and security. The scrubbed, shyly grinning faces illustrated his point that a boy does not enjoy being naughty but is often forced into it by the attitudes of adults towards them. The boys themselves were the best part of the program. I don't know under what circumstances the film was made, but their performance was quite natural.

Next week the program deals with social work in connection with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

CREST PROFFERS PAY DIRT TO ENTERPRISING STUDENT

About this time of the year last summer's earnings are running out, if they have not already skipped out long ago. The Crest Theatre offers one means of making enough to tide one over by selling their Spring Season subscription tickets at a ten per cent rate. The theatre is not using any professional agents, but is offering a monopoly on the sales to students of the U. of T.

The six plays on the spring season ticket are The Diary of a Scoundrel by Ostrovsky, Meeting At Night by James Bridie, The Gift of the Serpent by Stanley Mann, The Prisoner by Bridget Brand, Simon and Laura, a comedy and Stevenson's The Black Arrow.

The first two plays will be directed by Michael Langham, the director who has been engaged to work at Stratford this summer with Tyrone Guthrie. The third is a world premiere of a play by a Canadian television playwright now working in England. The Gift of the Serpent will open shortly after wards in London. John Blatchely, last year's Crest director will return to direct the Black Arrow, their final presentation of the Spring Season.

The theatre has operated successfully for over a year now, but it was felt that the subscription ticket would give a surer basis for operations as well as assure the theatre-goer of a seat where and when he wants it. Tickets are available for any night in their two-week run, although the season ticket was originally an idea for opening night.

Any student of U of T who is interested may sell subscriptions. The prices of a single season ticket range from $10.50 to $18.00 and the commission from $1.05 to $1.80. Aspiring salesmen have only to phone Miss Helen O'Reilly at the Crest Theatre.

Fame

EFUS offers fame to the best writer of short stories among its members. The winner of the short story contest, sponsored by our National Federation with champagne tastes will have his story published in New Liberty at their regular rate. The second prize is a straight $50.00. The deadline for stories to be handed in is tomorrow, Tuesday. Address them to Freddy Bull at St. Hilda's College WA 5-1451. Judges for the two stories to be sent from this campus are professors Child, Barclay and Endicott.

CAGE BLUES DROP TWO TOUGH ONES

Speaking ^{1/2} OF SPORT

By MAX ROSENTHAL

During the weekend while the hockey Blues were busy strengthening their hold on first place the Basketball Blues were busy losing their two most important games. Travelling to Windsor to meet Assumption Friday night and to London to meet Western Saturday, the Blues were hoping to win, at the very least, one of their games, if not both. But they were foiled as the highly-touted Western team stunned the Blues at their own game of quick-breaking, and as Assumption stifled the Blue attack by sheer aggressiveness. As a result of their losses the Blues entrenched themselves in a second place tie with Assumption and allowed the Western and Queen's teams to settle on top of the pack.

At the present time it would be extremely foolish to say, as was said earlier in the season, that the Blues would notch the top spot in the Intercollegiate League. For the Blues' present status parallels the one they held last year at this time when they lost a twin bill to the same Assumption and Western teams. At that time their main hopes of winning the Intercollegiate crown depended on their winning both games, for in spite of the fact that they won their remaining games they placed third in the standings.

This weekend if the Blues had beaten Assumption, Assumption would now be in third place and the Blues in first. If they had taken Western also, the Blues would be sitting snugly and confidently in first place with five victories and no defeats watching the others struggle for position.

As it now appears, the Blues will have to win their remaining five games while Western is losing three of their six remaining games, a virtual improbability, but hopeful possibility. If these desires materialize the Blues will finish with eight victories compared to seven for Western.

Unfortunately the saying is easier than the doing. For the Blues will undoubtedly have a great amount of trouble with the Western team which plays here March 2. The Mustangs not only boast the presence of their complete last year first string team, but also the acquisition of Ray Monnot, former member of the Toronto Tri-Bells. Not only that, but the Westerners' first team averages 6' 3" in height.

But the greatest obstacle to the Blues' comeback would appear to be the Golden Gaels of Queen's who have demonstrated hot and cold spurts all year. After the Queen's loss here one week ago Queen's coach, Frank Tindal implied that his team would take the Blues at Kingston. When asked what factors could be attributed to his team's loss Tindal calmly stated, as most coaches have stated, that "the floor was too small", and that on a larger floor his team would fare better. And if the Blues aren't wary when they go to Kingston the Gaels might turn the tables and upset them. Lest the skeptic does not accept this theory, it should be remembered that the same Queensmen upset Assumption earlier in the year.

Let It Not Be Forgotten . . .

. . . That the Basketball Baby Blues are most successfully defending their Intercollegiate Championship. With ten consecutive victories the Baby Blues are having an unprecedented season. The team boasts a great many future Blues, notably John Dacshyn, Ruby Richman, Mike Baida, and Jerry Wojdon whose performances this year have given ardent basketball fans something to talk about.

Blue Views . . . In spite of their 26-16 loss to the Rochester matmen, the wrestling Blues did not suffer any disgrace. It is considered an achievement to score sixteen points against one of the top U.S. wrestling teams . . . Doug Court displayed a good amount of showmanship Friday night when he put on a skating exhibition for the fans between periods at Varsity Arena. After falling the former Canadian Junior Men's skating champion, quickly retrieved himself and displayed some picturesque figure skating.

Squash Playoffs Soon

Of the five remaining Intramural squash matches, the only one that will decide a playoff position is tomorrow's SPS IV's-Dents D's match. An SPS win would give them a first place tie with Dents D and E, and would necessitate an elimination match for the two Group III playoff positions. A Dents win would simplify things by eliminating SPS IV's and put Dents D and E in the playoffs.

A Group I match between Senior SPS and Dents B, both in the playoffs, will break their third place deadlock behind Dents A and Senior Meds. The Group I teams out of the playoffs are Meds III and the UC II's, who meet each other this week in their last match.

The Group II playoff representatives are Pre-Meds, Dents C, and Law. The also-rans from this Group are Junior SPS, Junior UC, Vic, and Pharmacy A's. Although out of the playoffs, these last four teams can still earn Reid Trophy points in their final games this week.

All Intramural squash reps who have teams in the playoffs are reminded of Monday's meeting at 1.00 p.m. in the Intramural Office.

Drop Close One to Assumption Mustangs Hot on Home Court

Varsity's Basketball Blues sank into the middle of the Intercollegiate standings this week-end, dropping two important contests to Assumption and Western on the road. The Purple Raiders staved off a desperate Blue offensive in the late stages of Friday's encounter to win 69-63, while the Blues outplayed the Mustangs Saturday night, but fired a dismal twenty per cent to go down fighting 86-72. The Intermediates ran their unbeaten string to ten on the twin cage bill in the Thames Hall court, posting a 74-62 victory over the Western Colts.

Assumption led the Blues 40-33 at the half-time mark Friday night, but got suddenly hot in the second frame to pull well out in front. With eight minutes left in the game they were up seventeen points, but the sharp eyes of Don Fawcett and Leo Madden cut that lead to one with just two and a half minutes remaining.

Madden took a pass from the side and cut in on the Raider hoop only to be called for travelling. For dropping the ball on the court instead of passing it to the nearest official, Madden incurred a technical which Assumption made good, and then held off the Blues for the remaining minutes to win 69-63.

In London the following night, the Mustangs got hot in the first frame with a 48 per cent average to lead 52-37 at the half. Despite the perfect rebounding of big Al Vaichulis, who beat Western giant Ray Monnot to the ball almost every time, the Blues failed to capitalize on the numerous scoring opportunities and recorded a low twenty per cent average.

The Blues used a close press to advantage on the big Thames Hall court, forcing the Mustangs to resort to the fast break for scoring punch, which they did with amazing accuracy. Vaichulis and Matsalla fouled out in the second half to seriously hamper the Blue rebounding strength, but hard work by Fawcett and Kurdyak kept the Blues in the picture for most of the second half.

Fawcett led the Blues with 16 points against the Mustangs, while Coulter Osborne was high man on the floor with 18, to preserve his 19-point average. Madden and Vaichulis hooped 11 each for the Blues while Monnot with 15 and Smeeton with 12 were the other high Mustangs.

Fawcett led the Blues with against Assumption with 17 and was high man for the night. Stulac added 13 for the Blues, while George Joseph and Dick Mackenzie topped the Raiders with 16 and 14 respectively. John Dacshyn led the Varsity Seconds to victory with 22 points against the Colts.

Female Fencers Tops At McGill

Montreal, Feb. 13 (CUP) Not to be outdone by the boys' fencing team, the female squad from Varsity also came up with an excellent showing, to down McGill 9-7 yesterday. This was the first time that the girls have had an opportunity to compete in intercollegiate circles and from the overwhelming success of the meet, fencing at the Intercollegiate level will be a "must" from now on.

Doreen Toland, (IV Trinity) and Marguerite Zickmanis for the Toronto aggregation both won all four of their bouts without a loss and showed superior skill to their opponents. The other two members of the Blue and White foursome, Judy Brewster and Olga Mracek fenced extremely well and were definite assets to the team.

McGill Takes Championship Whyte and Nightingale Win

Montreal, Feb. 14, (CUP) - McGill University swept into possession of the Gibson Trophy here this weekend, scoring nineteen points in the Intercollegiate Boxing Tournament. Ontario Agricultural College placed second with ten points, followed by the University of Toronto with nine, and Queens University with seven.

McGill dominated the preliminary round, fought Friday night. They won seven bouts here, while OAC and Queens each won four.

and Toronto only three. Finalists from the University of Toronto were Harold Nightingale in the 145-pound class, John Whyte in the 150-pound class, and John Iglar in the Heavyweight class. Whyte and Nightingale each won their final bouts, while Iglar lost by decision to Jack Abraham of Queens, who replaced last year's champion in this division, Sherm Hood, also from Queens.

It was the second-year in a row for Nightingale and Whyte, both of whom won individual crowns in their weights last year when Varsity cleaned up in the Intercollegiate tournament.

McGill's John Lee was individual sabre champion winning three and losing none, while Maurice Husken, of the University of Toronto, was individual epee winner.

All the Varsity fencers, Walter Stalmack, Dick Zeidler, Walter O'Neil, and Martin Nash, who was particularly outstanding, fenced well.

Baby Blue Icemen Draw Borthwick Bangs In Two

Varsity's Intermediate hockey squad, playing host to a rugged Queen's team Friday, were forced to come from behind to register their second draw of the season. Toronto scored the equalizer late in the second period and both teams battled through the final frame on even terms for the 4-4 tie.

Queen's opened the scoring midway through the first period as Keenleyside collected the goal from Hoffman. Varsity's hard skating defenceman Barry Smith, playing his usual fine game, tallied for the Seconds to even the score. But Hoffman scored Queen's second goal to give the Tricolour the lead as

Medsmen 'Prod' For 'Probe' Await Issue Two

A new publication has appeared on the campus, to be known to all readers as The Prod. It is the unofficial report of Medical Society activities.

Since last fall medsmen have been anxiously awaiting the appearance of the second of sixteen proposed issues of the Medical Society publication "The Probe". Finally certain students decided to take matters into their own hands and prod The Probe into publication.

Quoting from the paper, "the Prod is published spasmodically in the interests of student apathy by a group of private financiers. The opinions expressed are those of the Editors. Both financial and literary contributions are welcomed."

Such pertinent questions as "why the Dean's desk faces away from the window in his office, why the Biochemistry Labs at the west end of the Medical Building always have the blinds drawn", and "why the Physiology Department moved south" are answered.

A. S. Davidson and A. S. MacPherson are editing the paper, which is authorized as Low Class Mail by the Post Office.

Varsity hit the ice at top speed as the second period opened, scoring twice within 5 minutes to take the lead. Ted Lotocki scored from Bill Naylor and Ian Morrison at the 0:09 mark. Don Borthwick raced end to end to notch Varsity's third point unassisted. Queen's bounced back to tally twice, Herminston scoring first from Osborne and Osborne netting Carscallen's pass for the second, Valguette also earning an assist. Both clubs showed plenty of fight as Varsity strove to gain the equalizer, the intermediates displaying more try than in their recent encounters. Don Borthwick, on his second unassisted effort of the afternoon, dropped Varsity's final score into the Queen's net to gain the Intermediate's their tie.

The third period was marked by all-out hockey and a brief but spirited display of fisticuffs as the two teams skated all out to break the tie. Murray Osborne was a buzzsaw all afternoon giving the Varsity defence plenty of trouble. Vic Hoffman was another top performer for Queen's, collecting a goal and an assist. Don Borthwick's two goal effort for the Intermediates marked one of Don's best games of the season. Doug Court, the same that displayed his figure skating talent at intermission time during the Blues' game Friday night, displayed a new found talent with the Intermediates in the afternoon. At his first time out as a defenceman Doug showed little regard for the incoming forwards turning a rugged game at his new spot.

SPS Swimmers Win Intramural

Starting auspiciously with a win in the Medley Relay, SPS natators swept to a win in the Intramural Swimming Championships held at Hart House on Saturday.

The two outstanding swimmers of the meet were Doug McCulloch and Bibi Stipetic, both from the little Red School house. McCulloch took first places in the 220 and the 440, plus swimming on the winning Free Style Relay team.

His fellow engineer, Stipetic, registered wins in the Individual Medley and the 200 back, in addition, to being on the victorious SPS Medley Relay Team. Stipetic's time of 2:39.4 in the Backstroke was a new Intramural Record.

Other winners of the night were Rambush, SMC, in the 50 Free Style; Telford, Meds, in the diving; Hill, SPS, in the 100 Free Style and Johnny Bates, Meds, in the 200 Breast.

SPS captured top place with a total of 68 points, followed by Meds with 53. Vic was in third place spot with a total of 13.

in the Forum as the feature attraction to McGill's Winter Carnival. Saturday they tangle with the University of Montreal Carabins in Verdun.

McGill, on the other hand, must win their remaining six games to retain any hope of winning the Queen's Cup. Should they defeat the Blues this Friday in the Forum, the Blues' last games here on March 4 could decide the title. The Redmen have one more game after that, with Laval, and even if they did defeat the Blues twice, they would still have to win that one. After this week-end's action in old Quebec, the picture will undoubtedly be much clearer.

UWO Wins Volleyball

By JANE KELLY

At the women's Intercollegiate Volleyball Tournament, played at OCE this past week-end, Western retained possession of the championship which it won last year for the first time. The Western girls won all their games in the round robin tournament by decisive margins. Queen's placed second, closely followed by McMaster in the third position. Toronto was fourth; while McGill and OAC were fifth and sixth respectively.

In the six games played on Friday evening, Queen's defeated Toronto 28-26. McGill defeated OAC 26-13 and Western and McMaster won two games each. Against Queen's, Western won 43-11; while against McGill the score was 35-10. Mac beat Toronto 37-28 and OAC 36-24. That Queen's game was a real heartbreaker for the Toronto girls, because they were leading right up until the last minute of play only to have Queen's win on the strength of three excellent serves.

The girls were up bright and early on Saturday morning and at it again by nine o'clock. Western won three more games. They swamped OAC 47-10, Toronto 44-18 and McMaster 36-19. Queen's also won three games on Saturday morning, defeating McGill 23-19. Mac 31-24, and the hapless OAC aggregation 51-23. While this was going on, Toronto edged OAC 30-27 and McGill 33-25, and McMaster humbled McGill 22-17.

A lack of sufficient practice proved a disadvantage for the Toronto team. Under the circumstances, however, the girls did surprisingly well. For example, at half time in the games with Western, Toronto was behind only six points. It's true that Western pulled away in the second half, but that was the best half time score against the purple team in the whole tournament. With a few more breaks, the Toronto team might have done even better. Inger Olson, Joan Galley, Grace Robinson and Mary Haza played especially well for Toronto. Coaches Sylvia Kerr and Miss Jackson deserves credit for a job well done with the limited material available and the few practice sessions.

The Western team was a pleasure to watch. One play worked particularly well for them. First, the ball was set up to the girl in the center of the front line. She in turn set it up to the girl on either side of her who took a run at the ball and jumping to her full height, spiked it hard over the net. Point after point was gained in this way. There were virtually no weak spots in the Western team, as every girl had excellent finger tip control of the ball. No other team in the tournament came even close to the standard set by them.

After it was all over, the teams went over to Wymilwood where they were treated to luncheon.

Next year we hope will be a different story. Intercollegiate competition in volleyball is relatively new and Toronto has never managed to win. Varsity is about due for a championship. So next year is our year.

singing sole, unhappy soul

You ask me why, though ill at ease,
I wear these rubber boots.
I tell you friend, that I've found peace.
Which has no substitutes.
... unanimous.

Everybody was looking at me. They were pretending not to notice me, but I could tell they were looking. I could feel their eyes on the back of my neck, burning and hostile.

It was in the library reading-room that I first noticed my new-found unpopularity. As I walked down the main aisle I became aware of people glancing up in startled agony. Accusation filled their eyes. I didn't know how to take their warning snarls. I didn't mind when one fellow hit me with a book; it was on the course. But when those two gentlemen from Engineering escorted me, feet first, to the exit, I realized the seriousness of the situation. And there was nothing I could do about it.

I couldn't help it if my shoes squeak. Did they think I liked it any better than they did? Did they think I enjoyed sounding like the mating call of the female albatross? ... Skreak-skrawk, skreak-skrawk, every step I took! It was driving me crazy!

If it was only musical or something I wouldn't mind so much. Say if they squeaked out the Varsity song, or the Drag-net theme, or even something simple, like a Bach sonata. It could even be the beginning of a new fad ... like neckties that glow in the dark, or pink shirts, or cinerama. But no, not my shoes! All they can do is mimic the serenade of a love-sick sea bird.

It got to be the same everywhere I'd go. Grown people snubbed me. Children pointed their fingers and laughed. Dogs barked and ran to hide. Even the pan-handlers in Queen's Park avoided me like I had the black plague. I didn't dare try the KCR after the way those Engineers in the library had treated me.

I tried everything — oiling them, twisting them, beating them with a hammer. Nothing worked. I even tried soaking them in water. That was a mistake ... the albatross loved it! Then, one day, I took them to a shoe surgeon, a specialist.

He poked and prodded them, searching for the source of my misery. Then he made his diagnosis: a rare form of shoe-sickness, usually fatal, curable in some cases through major surgery. I agreed readily to the operation. Anything for peace of mind!

I watched anxiously as he made his incision. Through the epidermis he cut, deeper, ever deeper, till he reached the very sole, itself. This was the critical stage. Perspiration beaded his brow as he realized the deadly importance of every move. The next few minutes would tell the story ... either he could save them or they were doomed to squeak forever. I couldn't watch any longer! I rushed out to the waiting room and read a magazine.

When it was over, he came out of the operating room carrying my shoes. He looked haggard, but he smiled as he said, "I think they'll be all right now. That'll be fifty cents, please." I paid gladly. No one could realize my joy at that moment. I nuzzled the little dears fondly, then tried them on with loving care.

When I walked out of that shop I was walking on air. In the street the sun was shining cheerily. Children frolicked on the sidewalk. Everyone was smiling. And somewhere a bird was singing ... an albatross, I thought.

AN ALBATROSS!!!

My heart sank. Half a buck to find they were incurable! Tears smarted in my eyes as I wandered dejectedly about the city. This was the end, I thought ... until I saw ... THEM!

They were in a shoe store window. Rubber boots, all kinds of them! Hip-length, ankle-length. Ladies' style with fur cuffs and kiddies' style with red stars. But one pair caught my eye. They were knee-length with bright red soles.

I rushed in to try them on. It was heaven! They had lots of toe-room and non-skid heels, and with some well-placed paint and those red soles they could look like a pair of white bucks. But best of all; there was no "skreak-skrawking" ... maybe a little squeek-squeeking", but nothing like those albatrosses. Rather like a bull-finch, I'd say.

Flying Mishap

Jerry Gilroy, a fourth year aeronautical engineering student, spent an exciting weekend. Flying in a Vampire jet near Trenton, he was forced to parachute out as the plane went out of control.

Gilroy, who couldn't be reached for comment, was apparently unhurt by the accident — so little that his landlady knew nothing of his adventure.

H H Needs High Calibre Nominations This Week

The importance of securing responsible, imaginative and energetic men to help mould the affairs and functions of Hart House was emphasized by Assistant to the Warden, Garth McDowell.

Nominations for House, Library, Music, Art and Debates Committee as well as for the Squash Racquet committee are not only accepted in the Undergraduate Activities office, but welcomed all this week, he said.

As an example of how committees function for the benefit of House members, McDowell cited the recommendation of the House Committee for the establishment of the Arbor Room. The recommendation was accepted by the governing body of the House, the Board of Stewards, which is mainly composed of students. He pointed out that undergraduate voting members on committees outnumber faculty, graduate and staff members by about two to one.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of keen and competent leadership being given by interested and enthusiastic undergraduates on these committees," Warden Joseph McCulley said.

Detailed rules and regulations concerning nominations and the election are available in the Undergraduate Activities Office this week. The election is scheduled for March 2. Advance polls will be open from 12 noon — 2.00 p.m. on February 28, March 1, in the Undergraduate Activities Office.

Memberships on Sale For Orchestra Assoc.

First major presentation of the Associates will be a concert by the Hart House Orchestra under Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Faculty of Music. This concert will be given on Sunday, February 27, at 8:30 p.m.

Included in this program will be works by Mozart, Warlock, Britten and Dvorak.

Memberships are available at the Porter's Desk Hart House, the Students' Administrative Council office, the Conservatory, and the Porter's Desk in Trinity. Tickets will also be mailed to students sending or bringing this clipping to the Varsity office.

Student memberships are being sold at 75c. Memberships for non-students and other friends of the university are being sold for $1.50.

The Board of Stewards of Hart House is co-operating with the students organizing this venture.

BALLOON, DINNER PROMOTE SHARE

The thermometer will soon be rising. This year's SHARE campaign swung into action Monday, and as soon as returns come in from all faculties the receipts will be marked up on the giant thermometer now installed outside the SAC office. As the mercury starts its climb to the $6,000 mark — the campaign objective — a large rubber weather balloon floating above the campus will draw attention to SHARE.

The SHARE campaign is not starting absolutely from scratch. It already has about eight hundred dollars collected for parking during the football season, but the big job is still up to the students.

The highlight of the SHARE campaign on the campus will be the SHARE dinner, to be given in the Great Hall of Hart House on Monday, Feb. 21. "This year's SHARE dinner is expected to be a grand climax to a successful SHARE campaign on the campus", said Barry Cooke, SHARE chairman.

"We have been very fortunate in acquiring the services of India's High Commissioner, Dr. M. A. Rauf, who will give us a first-hand account of the conditions in the area where the Patna medical centre is to be built", said Cooke. Mr. Rauf is an Oxford graduate who has practised law in London and Rangoon and has served as High Commissioner for India, Burma and Japan. As described by the chairman of the SHARE dinner, Dave Walker, he is, "truly a world diplomat."

Warden McCulley and E. A. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of SAC, have consented to add after-dinner speeches at the banquet to their heavy schedules of engagements. Said Walker: "Mr. McCulley's talents as an after-dinner speaker are known all over the province and he outdid himself for us at the SHARE dinner last year. He secured Dr. Rauf for us and once again he promises to be a source of moral support for the SHARE executive. All in all the students are in for a real treat next Monday."

Tickets may be purchased from the SAC office and faculty reps, for $1.25, twenty-five cents less than last year's price. Women are cordially invited, without escorts. There will be a reception first for Dr. Rauf at 6.15 p.m. in the East Common Room next to the Great Hall.

The 150 students who are expected to attend will, besides having a good dinner and an interesting evening, be making considerable financial contribution to the SHARE campaign.

SHARE Flies High

Here is the SHARE balloon, flying high over the SAC office in front of Hart House. The Thermometer, set up opposite the East side of UC, will register the heat with which students contribute to the SHARE Campaign. Canvassers are now out, calling for the students' money to help in Relief to students in the underdeveloped countries of the world.

Controversial Council Sponsored In Montreal

Montreal (CUP)—A model security council, praised by a former UN correspondent as being even more controversial than the original, concluded Saturday night with a banquet held at the University of Montreal. The council, under the joint sponsorship of McGill, Sir George Williams and the University of Montreal, was attended by 56 delegates from ten Canadian universities and colleges, each "representing" a

The first session was opened by President Rene Pouliot on Friday evening, after the provisional agenda had been tabled due to heated and insoluble argument. The first resolution, dealing with the admission of new members, was rejected following a lengthy debate. A second resolution, introduced by the U.S.S.R. and carried, proposed that all nuclear energy be devoted for peaceful purposes and that international control be set up for further atomic developments.

A resolution of the U.K. to accept the credentials of the "bonafide" Chinese People's Democratic Republic was the item discussed in the second session Saturday morning. Al—China; Assumption College—

Belgium; O'toreke School—Brazil; University of Montreal—France; Sir George Williams evening college—Iran; Royal though this was a procedural issue, not subject to veto, it was defeated.

The next proposition, from Iran, called upon the government of Egypt to terminate armed interventions and restrictions on international shipping through the Suez control. Iran withdrew the resolution, but the council reintroduced it and passed the last clause, requiring that the disarmament commission be made a permanent organ of the UN.

Official critique of the council was given by Walter O'Hearn, former UN correspondent and present drama critic for the Montreal Star.

The week-end wound up with a cocktail party and banquet (which was at the expense of the city of Montreal). Mr. Leon Lortie addressed the delegates on behalf of Mayor Drapeau and the "UN-like city council", and expressed hope that they enjoyed themselves in the cosmopolitan city and would return soon.

The guest of honour, Mr. Paul Gerin-Lajoie, submitted a "piece de resistance" deploring the stand of his province, Quebec, on a system of national education.

The delegates and the countries they "represented" were: University of Toronto—UK; McGill—USA; St. Lawrence University—USSR; Carleton College—Sir George Williams day college—Peru; United Nations Association—Turkey; the delegates of Macdonald Teachers' College Military College—New Zealand; were included among the representatives of Brazil, Peru and Turkey.

WUS Project Orientates Students For Pitfalls, Problems of Travel

For any students planning to go overseas this summer and puzzled about the intricacies of foreign exchange, the peculiarities of foreign peoples, or the means of living on next to nothing, there will be an orientation meeting at 1:00 p.m. today in Room 4 UC. The purpose of the meeting will be to find what topics the students would like to have cleared up in future sessions, stated Ron Gould, one of the organizers.

Orientation is a new idea on the Toronto campus. It is a WUS project, and if it takes on here it will be extended across Canada, said Gould. The project is being directed by Graham Ferguson, executive secretary of WUS, and Mr. Al Thomas, assistant to the director of the Canadian Association for Adult Education. Mr. Thomas has done previous orientation work with adults and students, and is the one who proposed the idea.

The project is being started during the SHARE campaign to demonstrate the work WUS does for students right here in Toronto in promoting understanding of other countries — work which it does also by exchanges, summer seminars etc, stated Gould.

Although this is a WUS service, said Gould, it is not limited to students going on WUS or NFCUS tours: it is free to any student going to Europe, Asia or Africa this summer.

The delegation represents Ontario's 20,000 students of all universities. It will try to get support on the provincial level for the national scholarship campaign which aims at total aid of two million dollars.

Canada's Policy Hangs Between? Debate Will Say

The Hart House debate, tonight at 8:00, takes as its resolution, In International Affairs, Canada is Stuck in the Middle.

Tom Hammond, III U.C. for the side of the affirmative asserts "Canadian policy reminds one of Alexander Pope's Man;— Being darkly wise and rudely great

With too much knowledge of the sceptic's side

With too much weakness for the stoic's pride

He hangs between; in doubt to act or rest."

Peter Martin, III U.C., defends the negative and says, "The motion represents nothing more than traditional posture and is indicative of the Canadian art of being non-committal. The motion, however, does not in any sense represent international political reality."

Mortley Marks, SPS, and Tom Hammond, will uphold the affirmative, while Peter Martin, and Peter Russell, IV Trinity, will defend the negative side.

Edgar McGinnis, President of The Canadian Institute of International Affairs, will be the honorary speaker at the debate.

Remarkably Better

BY JACK ELLIS

The wraps were taken off the 33rd Annual Photographic Exhibition last Monday evening, and the one hundred and seventy people present were treated to a commentary on the photographic problems of the entrants by Professor A. F. Coventry. Seventy-one black and white prints were chosen for the salon from the one hundred and fifty-nine entered, in the Senior, Junior and Karsh Trophy Divisions. Also on view are fifty-three of the two hundred and fifty-seven colour transparencies submitted for the Colour Award. The entire exhibition will be on view continuously in the Hart House Art Gallery for the next two weeks.

Under the auspices of the Hart House Camera Committee, this year's selection jury was Prof. A. F. Coventry, Mr. John Steele, and Mr. Eric Moore, prominent Toronto photographers. The Colour Award was awarded to D. A. Sprott for his nature slide entitled "Cedar Waxwing". The K. B. Jackson Trophy (Junior) went to J. Rolph (I SPS) for his "Winter Fantasy". Outstanding and versatile work was shown by D. A. Urquhart (III SPS) whose prints won not only the A. F. Coventry Award (Senior) and the Karsh Trophy (Campus Life and Activities) but also a runner-up position and several honourable mentions by the judges. His Senior winner was entitled "Eggs" and his Karsh Trophy winner, "Food for Thought".

A Hindu Swami

And Christianity

"There can be no real opposition between Christianity and Hinduism," said Swami Akhilananda, speaking on "A Hindu View of Christianity", at an open meeting of the Victoria Church Students' Union, Monday evening. "Christians and Hindus do not worship different gods but different aspects of the same Reality."

All truth is one but it has many names; it is the same way with God, said the Swami. Because men cannot understand God the deity incarnates himself as man, whenever materialism reaches a peak. Christ (whom the Hindus accept as one of several incarnations) came at such a time. The swami said we are in a similar position to-day.

"If India has given the world anything in several thousand years, it is the technique of spiritual practices, known as Yoga, which is actually the method of experiencing God." The swami pointed out that Christianity also has "wonderful techniques."

The swami listed the three ideals of the truly spiritual person as devotions, intellectual culture, and service.

Swami Akhilananda is a graduate of the University of Calcutta as well as a Hindu monk. He is a member of the American Philosophical Society and the Council of Science, Philosophy and Religion and the author of three books.

Big Ballots Better

Ballots in this year's Hart House elections, besides carrying candidates' names, will display their faculties or colleges, it was announced last night. The decision was made by the House committee, in order to prevent the possibility of distribution of counterfeited slates, said John Becker, IV SPS, secretary of the Committee.

From Monday till Friday nominees for the various committees will be campaigning in and through the halls of Hart House in an attempt to get the greatest voting turnout in years. Assistant to the Warden, Garth McDowell said. Just about anything goes for campaign week, he added. Election day will be March 2, with two advance polling days on the two previous days from 12 to 2 p.m. for those who can not vote at the regular time.

McDowell reminded candidates that they may display two posters, 24 by 36 inches in the House during campaign week. These posters will be hung in the main hall and in the corridor leading to the Arbor Room. If they follow the pattern of posters we saw in the halls last week, some weird and wonderful advertisements will be seen, he said. He suggested that nominees consider hanging posters in their own faculties and colleges, also.

Election speeches will be delivered by candidates each day in the east common room at 1.00 p.m. starting Feb. 23.

WUS Ceremonies In India

A Thought

The annual SHARE campaign is now in full swing. We hope that the balloon gaily floating above the SAC office, and the large red contribution thermometer standing in front of it will nudge even the most apathetic student into recognizing his obligations to his fellow man.

To us in Toronto, a contribution to student relief in some of the poorer nations of the world is apt to seem a trifle unimportant. But to thousands of students struggling for an education on the other side of the globe aid from the West is of vital importance both physically and spiritually.

It's something worth thinking about.

a report on modern education

The following article is a report on a section of the seminar held at Caledon this past week-end. The general topic for the seminar, which was attended by both staff and students, was "Education For What?" This report, written by Liz Scroogie, is concerned with the group that considered the scope of modern education.

What do we mean by education? What factors in society contribute to the educational process? What do they contribute? What should they contribute?

Group three began by defining education as 'the shaping of an individual human being by conscious human direction.' By this definition, education begins at birth so the first factor in society we had to consider was the family.

The family must mold the personality of the child. Within the confines of the family where there is a firm foundation of love and tolerance, the child is best able to experiment for himself, to develop his own distinctive characteristics, and to find himself as an individual.

It is from the family environment that the child develops his initial tastes, his interest or lack of interest in books, music, and other artistic forms. This will have a great influence in determining his future attitudes and interests, and his place in society.

It was on the question of the family's responsibility in the moral and religious education of the child that the strongest controversy in our group arose.

Opinions varied from those who said that the parents must give the child fixed moral values and religious beliefs with the rejection of other values and beliefs as false, to those who would have the parents make the child familiar with various sets of values and beliefs but leave him to make his own choice and decision.

Those of the latter extreme felt that this was such an important decision that each individual should be left to make it for himself and should not be prejudiced or have his mind shut by his childhood education. The dilemma of the individual, who suddenly finds his childhood faith shattered, and must find another is far more serious than that of the individual, who, having been brought up with an open mind, is trying to make a decision as to his faith. Education which gives but one faith and regards all others as false might lead to intolerance.

Many in the group disagreed violently with these ideas. An individual must have freedom, but before he is intellectually capable of exercising this freedom, it is the responsibility of the parents to pass on what they have found through experience to be true. This would include their faith and moral values. To be fair to their children, the parents must teach them what they honestly believe to be true. Our only decision on this question was that the family should give the child some ideas on the concepts of fairness, justice, and honesty, and religion.

We next discussed the changing role of the family and its members in modern society. Formerly a child stayed at home until the age of six; the trend today is to begin formal schooling at the age of two or three. In many families today, both parents are working — some out of economic necessity, others out of preference. Today the father is invading fields which formerly belonged almost solely to the mother — he is being called upon to take a much more active part in the care and training of the children. How will these trends affect the family as an educational institution?

Once the formal schooling begins, the family influence in education will to a greater and greater extent give way to other elements in society. The family, however, retains its unique importance as an integrating force.

Our discussion of formal schooling was much shorter and less heated. The school enters all branches of education but the emphasis is on the intellectual aspect. The group felt that the effect of the present method of formal schooling is to prepare people to earn a living and to accept the status quo.

Not nearly enough is done to teach people the more important art of how to live — how to get the most not materially but culturally and spiritually from their lives.

This lack seems to be especially evident and especially crucial for those who leave school as soon as the law permits.

At the end of our time we had discussed only two of the many institutions which contribute to the total educational process and these inadequately. Education is

This is the season for campus elections. In the space of the next few weeks, a flurry of nominations, campaigning, and elections will spread from one college and faculty to the next. Hundreds of offices in dozens of colleges and faculties will be at stake.

Also at stake will be the future of student government on this campus. The people who are chosen in these elections will be the ones who will run your affairs next year. They will spend your money. They will control your local extra-curricular affairs. In many cases, they will represent you and your views outside of your college or faculty.

Student Government in the past on this campus has hardly been on the whole what one would call vigorous. Both the SAC and local governments have not served the student as well as they might have.

However, the student has only himself to blame. His reluctance to run for office, his refusal to examine the issues of the personalities that are concerned in the campaign, and finally his apathetic neglect of his right to vote rob campus elections of their vitality and their purpose.

Equally dangerous to student democracy is the tendency long prevalent on this campus for students to vote for officers in their student societies on practically any other grounds than rational ones.

Often groups of students combine to ensure the election of a member of their particular residence, fraternity, or clique. One glib speech can outweigh years of good service to local organizations. A fancy poster is a greater asset in an election campaign than a platform.

The way to ensure that this campus will get good service from its student governments is to take an active and intelligent interest in the elections for your representatives.

We would like to point out to skeptics that these girls will find the sorority system is characterized by honest virtue, genuine kindness, a true Christian spirit, healthy social relations and an admirable democracy. However, we can't.

a continuous process — it begins at birth and ends at death. To discuss all its aspects in a week-end was an impossible task. What we did accomplish in this limited time was to awaken interests in and stimulate thinking about problems which we are apt to take completely for granted.

A Future AVR?

The ALL VARSITY REVIEW has been here for two years now. Unfortunately there must be over half the undergraduate population of this University who have never had the opportunity to see this heart-warming show of comedy, music, and dancing. Unfortunately these same students have never had the opportunity to contribute their energy and talent to create what was an enthusiastic expression of Varsity spirit; intangible, but always present. In the past this show, which was a combination of fine talent and musical skill derived from all parts of the campus ran for a successful week in the Hart House Theatre.

After the last performance of the 1953-54 AVR, which by the way appeared on C.B.C. television, the committee in charge decided that the show had been of such a high caliber that without the same talent next year any attempt in 1953-54 would probably end in financial failure. The committee for 1954-55 easily and quickly came to the same conclusion. Such a decision might seem to have been too hasty when one realizes that the present production of Brigadoon is in reality an AVR. The talent in this show has come from eight different colleges and faculties and Brigadoon is testimony to the fact that there is a great deal of musical interest, ability and vivacity in the undergraduate body if it is given a chance to perform.

The SAC would very much like to provide such a chance in 1955-56, because an AVR in addition to being a friendly relaxing show is one of the few full expressions of the whole university life. At the same time the SAC realizes that the project "Review of the AVR" will be even more difficult after a lapse of two years. The committee has progressed however, to the point where by the unanimous approval of the SAC they have been authorized to begin a contest.

A prize of $50.00 and the opportunity to see your work produced on stage for the declared winner of—

1. A story of the University from its earlier years to the present which will form the book for the musical score.

2. A series of skits, some musical, with the same theme as above. All applications should be submitted at once to the SAC office and then there are all the summer months to write your material.

Also the committee wants all applicants for Director and Producer to submit their names to the SAC office immediately.

Does the AVR come back? That depends on you. From the response to the appeals the committee will render a decision on the advisability of going ahead with an AVR in 1955-56. This is your show and it needs your support. What is needed is the spark of interest, and a great deal of energy from all over the campus. Make the committee's job as easy and help bring back this "gay, lively and impertinent show".

DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT NOW!

Critic in the

From a recent biography of the famous American actor Booth, Philip Dunne and a film of more than ordinary interest. Unfortunately you may never get about seeing it, for though it is widely publicised under the title of Prince of Players, it is at the Odeon-Toronto under the misnomer King of Broadway. The theatre critic of the other morning paper, who justly complained, the Booth's life is a little dramatised, but I still think Prince of Players an account of what must have been a most unusual life. The screen-play follows the early years as a manager and guardian of mad, talented father, the actor Junius Brutus Booth through his early triumph on the stages of America, and the threat to his career and of the Booths, president of the brother's assassination of Abraham Lincoln. The film makes most of its effect of verisimilitude because of the talent.

Music, drama and all-varsity review

1945 to 1953

AVR's of the Past

When the AVR was first born in 1944 it was a small, but healthy babe — so healthy that it was used to make money for its parents — the International Students Service of WUSC. It all started with certain beauties of the Dents faculty appearing in filmy pants and stuffed brassieres.

By 1945 the brain child had grown to quite a size. It was a "really wowy, show, girls, gags, and even the Bob Aurtet's rendition of their impression of the famous people on the campus. School Nite scenes and excerpts from the U.C. Follies provided the audience with plenty of talented etc., girls." (see Torontonensis, p. 257)

In 1946, the growing conglomeration of skits was first called All-Varsity Revue. Hailed as a "surpriss package of campus entertainment," it played two nights in Convocation Hall and made $2,500 for the ISS.

Still for the benefit of ISS the "Barrel of Fun" of 1947 featured such stalwarts as Ross McLean, Don Harron, the Varsity Quartette and a jazz combo. The show did not attain its majority until 1949 when it was produced by George McGowan (now of the Crest Company) in Hart House. With George McGowan again as producer in 1950 the show was a sell-out and also sold many AVR Sundaes at Di Sweets. The featured attraction was "Hart House Towers" with Ward McAdam as Choral Director and Bob Osborne starring in the role of the Mad Warden.

In 1951 the AVR fell sick and almost died. Says The Varsity of 1952: "After countless post-mortems came the decision: 'Twas but a temporary murder, the corpse must be revived for the next year.' Jim Guthro, producer, has been given this task." The reason that the council turned thumbs down was the same that brought the AVR's death two years ago: dissension over a director.

In spite of its temporary absence the Revue seems to have revived healthily enough in 1952. Says Varsity reviewer Jack Gray: "I'm not clawing away at the Thesaurus looking for superlatives to spread in producer Jim Guthro's path, but I don't think there is any argument about the fact that the AVR is the best campus show this year. Particularly in the first half it had the things you look for in a Revue—the more or less impertinent survey of contemporary events, pace, brightness, wit and good humour."

The 1953 AVR was so good that the show was dropped. The SAC, hesitant of being able to do it so well again, decided not to try again, at least not for the time being. There is something that doesn't love an AVR that wants it down. But it seems that one SAC can sometimes profit from the mistakes of another, for the present council is trying to revive it again.

THROUGH THE MISTS

Brigadoon Is Braw

Brigadoon is a good show. Let me say this much before I get down to carping, just so that I won't leave the wrong impression by the time I'm through. It's not consistently good; sometimes it's slow, sometimes it's rough, but the general impression is a pleasant one.

The biggest factor in the show's success seems to be the work of Leon Major, the director. He has resolved the problem of co-ordinating and balancing the acting, the singing and the dancing, and managed to get the people on stage and the people in the pit to move through the script without falling all over themselves and it. He has also managed to get fairly intelligent acting performances from singers, something which can be very hard to do.

In the matter of movement, Terry Johnson, the choreographer, deserves considerable credit. I particularly like the sequence with the girls and Jean (Gogo Sokolec) to the song "Come to me, Bend to me." Another impressive dance was the one that Maggie (Charlotte Wright) dances as a dirge for Harry (Douglas Stewart) whom she loves. The simple use of the fling was quite moving.

Lotsy Munroe who played Fiona MacLaren was strong, both in singing and acting. She attacked her part with a consistent Scotch accent and carried it and the show along with her whenever she appeared. Her singing voice has a marked change of quality in different registers, but she made this effective by suiting the quality to the type of song she was singing. Dan McCarthy playing opposite her as Tommy Albright was satisfying vocally, but was slightly unconvincing when talking.

Marilyn Salter as Meg Brookie had the most pep of anyone in the show. She moved naturally and put the utmost into all her lines and songs. Even the simple word "no" had hidden ramifications. Her singing of "The Real Love of My Life" got the loud applause it deserved from the festive first night audience.

Michael Carr as Meg's sixth, or is it seventh, son, and Tommy's friend and foil came across fairly well, mostly due to his lines, but he did not give his scenes the pace they might have had. Jerry Epstein was a very appealing Charlie, but he was in the right place, but his voice did not set beyond the conductor most of the time. In straight acting parts, Dave (John) was very well as Mr. Lunde.

The dancing was not everything that could be expected when one considers what sounds have come from the Royal Alexandra one is not quite so quick to criticize. The only really glaring section was the violins on occasion.

The songs of Patricia Colman were unusually imaginative. Brigadoon was suggested by house, with a very strong perspective on them, when were unashamedly moved on in the middle of act. Speaking of lighting, I don't know whether it was an accident or not, but it seemed to be right anyway rather illogically at different times.

The show is easily the best musical on the campus in some time.

Prince of Players actor, Richard Burton. The great interest of Prince of Players lies in its presentation of many of the best scenes from Shakespeare's plays. Certainly, it makes only desultory attempts to convey a convincing atmosphere.

If Prince of Players is any indication, nothing but the plays of William Shakespeare were seen in the American stage prior to 1885. Only a fragment of a play by any other author appears — in the scene of Lincoln's assassination. Scenes from the Bard's plays are rehearsed, given in full costume, used as part of the dramatic action of the screenplay itself, and molded into the fabric of the story in every conceivable fashion. With an actor of the calibre of the average Hollywood thespian, this would have been disastrous, but in Richard Burton, the director had a youthful player with a fine physique, sufficient sensibility and experience, and most important of all, a magnificently flexible voice. As a result, the Shakespearean scenes are beautifully brought off. Mr. Burton's version of Richard III's opening speech is particularly magnificent, and the two speeches from Romeo and Juliet which he gives are almost laughably superior in warmth and character to Laurence Harvey's recent screen performance of Romeo. Only in the "to be or not to be" soliloquy does he fail to impress, perhaps because he gives almost the same rendering, inflection by inflection, as Laurence Olivier does of that same speech. Burton's fine performance is occasionally negated by an execrable one from Maggie McNamara as Mary Devlin, but it manages in retrospect to overcome this handicap, and that of the screen-play, too. It is the making of the film.

MORRISON and MacMILLAN

Last Sunday's Hart House Concert provided a thoroughly enjoyable evening of fine singing. Marv Morrison and Andrew MacMillan opened their joint recital with the Count-Susanna duet from The Marriage of Figaro. Both artists displayed their excellent acting abilities and a fine sense of Mozart style. These same merits made the Papageno-Papagena duet from Magic Flute sheer delight.

Of Mr. MacMillan's group of Italian songs, I liked O chio non seguo piu best. Although vocal deficiencies were evident in this group, the clear diction and sincerity and just of interpretation more than made up for them.

There is a tendency when singing French art songs to be either "arty" or coy. Miss Morrison was neither in her Chants d'Auvergne. What a pleasure it was to hear a Berceuse that actually sounded like a lullaby with its lovely pensive tones. The other songs were filled with a lush Gallic joie de vivre.

Each artist presented a group of British folk songs with simplicity and charm. I liked especially the lively rendition of Mr. MacMillan's Gae bring ta me a pint o' wine and the sweet warbling of Miss Morrison's voice in Ca' the Yowes.

For the finale of the concert the artists took the stage from Act II of La Traviata beginning with Pina Sereone on a solo. Neither artist has a voice of the truly operatic type demanded by this opera. But both had vocal freedom in the upper register, and although I was happy that they attempted the scene there was no maudlin sentimentality in the German, no hammy sobbing from Valeria. It was a rare treat to see what sensibility and of the complex scenes in opera become believable and moving theatre in the hands of these fine artists.

BLUES SUCCUMB TO NIAGARA 99-61

Speaking ^{1/2} OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

This weekend the Hockey Blues can wrap up the Intercollegiate championship by defeating McGill in the Montreal Forum Friday night. Should they do this, the balance of the schedule will be meaningless, even if McGill wins all their remaining games. The following weekend, the Blues will see no action, while the Redmen make up for those three games in hand with contests in Quebec City and Verdun. That free weekend offers the Blues the possibility of an exhibition contest in any one of three fields, in order to keep in shape for the final game, should they lose to McGill this weekend.

What was originally thought of was an exhibition benefit game against a Toronto major team, but plans for this contest have since been dropped. What we would like to see is either an exhibition series with an American University, or a game with one of the idle OHA Senior 'A' teams, if for no other reason than to see the Blues prove their relative worth in the world of hockey. This past Intercollegiate season has shown nothing, other than that the Blues are way out of their class playing teams from Laval, McGill, and the University of Montreal. That the league encounters have been so close in some instances is only accounted for by the fact that a lack of adequate opposition leaves a team stale, no matter how good it is.

If they are to play an American University, we would like to see the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, be the visiting team. The Wolverines, who have a predominantly Canadian team, would be interesting opponents for the Blues, and in the past have always come up with a strong team. Wally Maxwell, former Marlboro captain, and Lorne Howes are just two of the players with the Wolverines who would make such a series of real local interest. Howes played in goal with the Memorial Cup winning Barrie Flyers in 1951, the same team that boasted such present NHL stars as Leo Labine and Real Chevrefils.

The other possibility would be an exhibition contest with a top Senior 'A' club, just to prove that the Blues could give such a team a run for their money for the Allan Cup. We have long believed that OHA Junior and OHA Senior hockey are about on a par, although this may not be the case today. Certainly in 1947, when the St. Mike's Majors won the Memorial Cup in a torrid final series with the Winnipeg Monarchs, it is probable that Junior hockey was considerably better. That year St. Mike's boasted a team of future NHL greats, such as Tod Sloan, Les Costello, Ed Sandford, and Fleming Mackell, while at the same time Harry Taylor was playing for the Monarchs. The Blues were about equal to both St. Mike's and the Marlboros before the season opened, and supposing that Junior and Senior hockey is relatively equal they should fare just as well against an OHA Senior 'A' club.

Unfortunately the game with the Kitchener-Waterloo Flying Dutchmen, originally scheduled for the end of November, had to be passed up. Had the Blues met the Dutchies then they would have been at the peak of their power. It is unlikely that after such a relatively easy season they could defeat the Dutchmen, who are currently top dogs in the OHA Senior 'A' loop. The possibility of both these games still exists however, and it would be interesting to see one or other of them occur.

A Six Team League . . .

. . . in the Intercollegiate Hockey Union is not as unlikely as we had thought. There is at least one College from the present Ottawa-St. Lawrence Valley league interested in Senior Intercollegiate competition in the Ontario-Quebec group Loyola University, who are supposed to have a very strong representative in that loop, are considering application for entry to our league. Queen's have already dropped out of the Ottawa-St. Lawrence circuit in preparation for entry into the Senior League. However, after last Friday's encounter with the Baby Blues, we doubt that the Tri-Color should be making such overtures to the CIAU executive. We are rather disturbed about the state of athletics at the Kingston school. In the fall we had a misfortune to witness a breach of the accepted canons of sportsmanship, and then two weeks ago the Gael basketball team put on a minor display of the same in Hart House. Now we have been graced with another exhibition on the ice lanes, and it leaves us filled with wonder.

From the Blue Room . . . The UTS Old Boys' Annual Hockey night is being held this Friday in Varsity Arena. Feature of the evening, as well as the game between School Firsts and the Old Boys, will be a girls' game between St. Clements and Havergal College . . . Hart House offers plenty of action on this Saturday's Athletic Night card. The Basketball Blues meet Assumption in a do-or-die effort, while John McManus' Baby Blues try Andy's A.C. University championships in wrestling, a swimming meet with Rochester, and a fencing meet with R.M.C. fill out the bill. Should be good . . . Baby Blue ice men meet Ryerson tomorrow at 4:30 in Varsity Arena.

Binnington Tops Blues With 13 Intermediates Swamped 72-52

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Feb. 15—(Staff)—Playing before a near-capacity crowd in Niagara University's mammoth Field House, the Varsity Blues tonight were defeated 99-61 by the Purple Eagles. Surprisingly good, even in defeat, the Blues made the best showing of any Canadian team to date against the Niagara club, who are ranked fifteenth in American College ball. The Baby Blues, facing several potential All-Americans in the Niagara Freshmen, lost 72-52 in a preliminary game.

Earlier this season the Purple Eagles had laced Assumption College 99-55, and were rated fifth in the nation before Christmas. However, losses to LaSalle and UCLA in the NCAA Holiday tournament in Madison Square Garden, pushed them back to fifteenth.

Both teams learned a lesson in team-work as the smooth combination of Ed Fleming and Tom Hemans led Niagara around the Blue hoop. Art Binnington and Pete Potter were outstanding for the Blues, hitting for thirteen and ten respectively. Potter was the only guard setting Binnington up while the lanky centre was making good on all his opportunities as well as holding his own in the rebound department.

Niagara led 45-30 at half-time, after a brief appearance in the first frame by Charlie Hoxie. In the second the Eagles threw in sixteen points before the Blues found the range and from there in the game was fairly even. Binnington hit for 13 while Potter struck for 10 to lead the Blues. Fleming, All-American second-stringer last season led the Eagles with 19, while two dead-eye guards Jim McConnell and Jim MacDonald potted 14 and 12 respectively.

Bob Ellis outshone everyone on the floor while hooping a neat 28 to lead the Freshmen to victory. High man for the Baby Blues was Jerry Wojdon with 9, while Ruby Richman went for 6.

Engineers Nip UC Redmen Irish Club Doctors 63-33

By TOM WILLIAMS

Bad shooting and strong defensive play combined to make dull basketball as Sr. SPS dropped Sr. U.C. 44-31, in yesterday's noon-hour action.

Both clubs had trouble solving the opposition's zone, with neither hitting well from the outside. Skule went ahead by flooding one side of the Redmen defense and passing it out of position. With U.C. on the run, the Engineers ran up a commanding lead and coasted to an easy win.

Indicative of the poor shooting, was the first period, which ended with SPS leading, 12-8. Only five field goals were counted in this frame, with U.C. dumping only one, and that with just thirty seconds remaining.

The second stanza was decidedly faster, with both teams using the quick-break in an attempt to beat the zone. However, loose ball-handling and erratic passing detracted from the effectiveness of such moves, possession changing frequently without a shot being attempted.

The third period saw the Engineers take their most decided edge, outscoring the Redmen, 17-

10, to win going away. Ottaway, who was high for Skule with nine, sank six in this frame, and sparked the defense with his fine rebounding.

With both sides shooting poorly, rebounding was a major factor. And in this department the Engineers held a wide margin. Boynton defensively, and Ottaway at either end of the floor, led Skule in this, while Wilson did most of the jumping for the Red.

Besides Ottaway, high scorers for Skule were Boynton and Hawkins, six each, and Floyd with five. Patterson for U.C. matched Ottaway's nine, while Brock, six, Wilson and Sutherland, five each, were notables for U.C.

On Monday, St. Mike's A almost doubled the score on Sr. Meds, 63-33, while Sr. Vic likewise desecrated the spirit of Valentine's day, smashing U.C. III, 60-34.

Fletcher and Primeau led the powerful Irish with thirteen each, closely followed by Ahearn, twelve, and Renzetti, ten. For the Doctors, Glick hooped thirteen. Magden and Papsin, six apiece.

In the other slaughter, Atkin and Deis scored a dozen each, for Vic, while Watson dumped ten. For U.C. Van Seter with ten, and Hugo, seven, were high.

Basketball Gals Win In Hamilton

The Intercollegiate and Intermediate girls' basketball teams eked out two very close wins on Monday evening against McMaster in Hamilton. The seniors topped their opposition by a 27-24 score, while the junior margin was even narrower, 25-24.

Ev Macaluso, with ten points, led the sharp Mac attack; Anne Habertin was the best on defense for the Maroon and Grey, successfully checking the speedy Blue forwards time and time again. The Toronto squad seemed to lack the solid scoring punch they have displayed in previous games; Mary Winsip was high scorer with six points, closely followed by Pat Swayze, with five.

As the score might indicate, the Intermediate tilt was a very close and exciting one. The Baby Blues held a slight 16-9 edge at half-time, led by sharp-shooters Marg Molnar and Lillian Bobson. Bev Carleton was best for the Mac Attackers in the first two quarters with six points.

The second half saw Mac gradually close the gap in the score. With seconds to go, one basket would have meant victory for the Hamiltonians, but time halted their last quarter attack.

By FLO MIDDLETON

After watching the intercollegiate volleyball meet here last weekend, one begins to wonder just what is the matter with old Varsity. A university, the size of Toronto, and yet we cannot dress a team that is of a calibre worthy to enter the ranks of intercollegiate volleyball.

Before people start jumping to the conclusion that I am stepping on a lot of people's toes and that it is not my place to criticize so severely, let me clear a few points up. Firstly, the 1955 edition of the Blue and White played well and did their best to uphold their school colours, but it must be admitted that Sylvia Kerr in her attempts to mould a team just did not have the material.

All the girls on the team are good, but for a few exceptions, you could not say that members of the team were outstanding. They do not come under the heading of what you usually consider intercollegiate quality.

Why is this? The whole question leads back to the usual problem in women's sports—the women of this campus are disgustingly apathetic.

When it came time for try-outs for the intercollegiate volleyball team, no horde of shining eager little faces turned up, but rather a small group of girls. When it came to making cuts for the team, there were no great weighty choices to be made because there were so few girls that turned up for the try-outs that Sylvia hardly had an opportunity to choose.

How can you possibly have a championship team, let alone one that is worthy of contention, if you do not have a competition to start with. Without this competition, it is impossible for a coach to separate the wheat from chaff.

Nothing can be done about this state of affairs now, but girls, when next year rolls around and there are notices put in the Varsity about volleyball try-outs, let's not have a repeat performance of this year. Let's get out and show the world that Toronto has talent and that we can take the intercollegiate Volleyball Championship with flying colours. Enough of these Western victories!

Blue Teams Face Important Tilts

This weekend the chips are down for both the Blue hockey and basketball teams. The puckmen entrain tomorrow night for a doubleheader in old Quebec, and a victory Friday night in the Forum against McGill will win them the championship, while a loss will make the road to the Queen's Cup just that much tougher. The cagemen face virtual elimination from the hunt for the Intercollegiate basketball title if they drop this Saturday's important clash with Assumption.

The Purple Raiders will be visiting on the Hart House floor as the feature attraction to Saturday's Athletic Night, while the Baby Blues meet Andy's A.C. in a preliminary contest at 7:00. Also on the large Hart House card will be the University championships in wrestling, a swimming meet with powerful Rochester Tech, and a fencing meet with R.M.C.

The Blues, who lost to Assumption 69-63 last Friday in Windsor, will need all the strength they can muster for this tilt. Now in the middle of the standings, with a 3-2 record, the Blues must win all their remaining games to retain any hope of even tying for the championship.

The hockey Blues meet McGill on Friday night and then tangle with the University of Montreal Carabins in Verdun Saturday. The Redmen have three games in hand, and consequently are sitting nine points behind the Blues in the league standings. They will have to win all their remaining games to beat out the Blues for the Queen's Cup, and a Varsity win Friday night will bring the championship to Toronto for the first time since 1951.

Medsmen Trounce Vic 7-0 Trinity A's Beat Pre-Meds

By JOHN VOJTECH

Sr. Meds proved that they are going to be tough competition in the intramural hockey playoffs soon to be played, as they closed their regular schedule yesterday by trouncing Sr. Vic 7-0 at Varsity Arena.

Bill Walters, Robin Arnold, and Don Marshall scored two goals each to lead the way for the high-flying Doctors. Robertson added the other tally. Although the Vic team was outscored, it was not outplayed as throughout the second period, they outskated their opponents. The Doctors, on the other hand, were quite willing to let the Vic men take charge of the play while they sat back and waited for the breaks.

Aside from the goal scorers John Duff, John Fowler and Greig Black played well for Meds. Hugh Sampson, John Hamilton and Ross Holden starred in a losing cause.

Trinity A's assured themselves of a playoff spot, as they defeated Pre-Med's 3-0. Chris John Johnston scored two goals for Trinity, while Paul McTaggart notched the other goal. Trinity had it all over the Pre-Med team as only the work of Al Cecutti in the Pre-Med nets kept the score as low as it was. John Goodwin came up with a fine performance in the Trinity nets as he recorded his fourth shutout in league play.

Vic IV's failed in their attempt to clinch first place in the Division I, Group 7 standings as they fought to a 3-3 tie with the surprising Dents C team. As a result of this game, Vic and St. Mike's C's are tied and each has one game left to play.

Norm Williams sent Vic ahead in the opening seconds of the game as he scored on a long shot from the blue line immediately after the faceoff. Alan Barker and Ian MacPherson added singletons for Vic. However, Woods, Scott and Klunis scored to keep Dents in the running.

Harding Cracks Old 440 Mark

Another week, another record, as Dick Harding, the Skule flash, lowered the indoor inter-faculty 440 mark to 53.2 seconds. Doug McEntee was second and Bill Gelling of S.P.S. was third.

Victoria College won the 24 lap relay by an easy 60 yd. margin. Their team, composed of Gord Hueston, Gord Banks, Peter Watson and Dick Setten covered the distance in 9:24. Skule finished second and U.C. was third.

The University track team will see action again this weekend in a dual meet against Buffalo Y.M.C.A. at 1:30 p.m. on Saturday in Hart House. The Blues are expecting a tough fight in maintaining their undefeated record, and the meet should be well worth watching.

What's news at Inco?

THE BEAM OF A POLICE OFFICER'S FLASHLIGHT picks out a burglar who has been caught by sound waves he couldn't hear. These sound waves are sent out by the Alertronic Alarm—a new device in which small rods of nickel play a vital part.

INCO NICKEL RODS SET OFF ALARM BUT BURGLARS CANNOT HEAR IT

IN THE DEAD OF THE NIGHT a burglar is stuffing silver into a bag. Suddenly he is pinned in the glare of a flashlight. The police have him . . . trapped by a sound he couldn't hear. The Alertronic Alarm has done its job.

The heart of this device is two slender rods of pure nickel that change their length when magnetized, causing a diaphragm to vibrate and send out sound waves so high-pitched they cannot be heard by human ears. But the slightest movement by an intruder disturbs the sound waves and sets off the alarm.

Inco research and development teams in cooperation with industry have been in the forefront of the world's metallurgical developments since 1921. The knowledge and experience gained are among Inco's greatest assets. Inco research points the way to Inco's future!

Nickel helps report fires

Even the heat of a wad of paper smoldering in an ashtray will disturb the sound waves and set off the Alertronic Alarm.

It also drives mice crazy

So high-pitched are the sound waves that mice—who can hear them—are driven to an insane helter-skelter dash for safety.

This is only one of hundreds of uses of ultra-sonic waves—uses that range from finding fish in the sea to aging cheese.

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request. Bulk copies supplied Secondary School teachers.

These are some of the posters littering the halls of the "Skule-house". Both the general effect and some of the details are shown. Certain engineers seem to be going "all out" in their appeal to get elected.

The number of candidates for positions on the engineering executive (89 nominees) is a remarkable contrast to those for positions on Hart House. Several positions in Hart House do not have any applicants.

It is reported that this will be the most fiercely contested Engineering election in some years. Others have stated that the Skulemen are taking so much interest in their own elections, they are not showing their usual interest in Hart House.

The engineering elections take place today.

Broken Chick Eggs Turtle Hearts In Conversat Show

About 6,000 people are expected to attend this year's University of Toronto Zoology Conversat, which swings into a three-day run to-day.

Beating turtle hearts in sugar solution will be among the displays of the Biology Club's Exhibition, which can be appreciated by laymen.

Chick embryology will be demonstrated by broken chicken eggs, a department spokesman said. The public will also get a free look at the inside story of multiple births. As well, films will be shown.

For those interested in fish, the students and staff of the Zoology Department have built a real stream, which will show in detail the life history of speckled trout.

The Department of Zoology will house the exhibition in the second building on the west side of

Still Need Many More Nominees For Competition In H H Elections

Skulemen To Vote For Many Slates

Today is election day for members of the University of Toronto's Engineering Society. The Skulemen will choose their future representatives from among a total of 89 candidates — the largest nomination turnout in recent years, reported Bill Queen's Park, north of College St. The doors will be open on Friday, February 18, from 7.30-10.30 p.m., Saturday, February 19, from 10.30 a.m.-7.00 p.m., and Sunday February 20, from 2.00 p.m. to 5.00 p.m.

Deeks, the Vice-President of the present Engineering Society.

The previous high was 80 in the 1952-53 elections.

Interest in the elections is running at fever pitch among members of the Society. The Skule hallway has been plastered with posters for the past week, with as many as 50 posters for one candidate. These have ranged from prairie scenes to nudes.

Officers of the engineering society, club chairmen, year and graduate executives, and Athletic Association officers will be chosen in the elections. Winners of the J. Roy Gilley trophy for the outstanding freshman and the Bronze "S" Award will also be voted on by the engineers.

Running for president of the Engineering Society are Herb Cunningham, Leo Gray, and Paul Walters. First Vice-President nominees are Fred Gray, Gord Kelly, and Ray Larsen.

Despite the great number of candidates, eleven positions will be filled by people elected by acclamation. There is one position (Vice-President of the Athletic Association) that has no nominee.

An urgent plea for candidates in Hart House elections was issued last night by Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden.

With only one day to go until nominations close, no nominations have been received for the Art Committee, two for the Debates Committee, four for the Library Committee, and six for the House Committee. Deadline is tonight at 6.00 p.m.

At least eight candidates are needed for each committee to make it full, and more to necessitate elections. The Art Committee, which had only two members carried over instead of the traditional three, needs nine candidates for acclamation, and more for elections. The only Committee having the usual number of contestants is the Music Committee, with eleven candidates nominated.

McDowell also emphasized the need for candidates to be from various Colleges and Faculties, because only three members of any college of faculty can be on a committee at the same time, and only two can be elected from the same college or faculty. The third person must be a carry over, he said.

Nominations for all the major committees and the Squash Racquets Committee will be accepted in the Undergraduate Activities Office all day, today, he said. A mover and a seconder are needed for nomination.

"Aside from the academic purposes which any male undergraduate has in coming to this University", Warden Joseph McCulley said, "I know it is one of the truly educational and rewarding experiences to serve in some capacity on a committee".

"Serving in such a capacity means some hard work, but it also means picking out some of the best traditions, thoughts and purposes of the University," the Warden said.

"Hart House enjoys the physical benefits of a structure designed to encourage the widest variety of student activities", he said.

"To govern, to direct and to sustain this purpose is the duty of the committees and clubs. In short, to maintain actively the responsibilities of self-government which is a complex thing, won with difficulty and lost with ease, the tasks of the House government must be shouldered by student members", he said.

Upward Progress Of SHARE Gauge Creeping Slowly

The giant SHARE thermometer crept up over the $600-mark today.

But publicity directors for the campus-wide fund-raising campaign said it was scarcely a start in their drive to cop $6,000, most of which will go toward a new student health centre at Patna University.

The fund-raising campaign is being conducted by the World University Service.

Canadian university students have undertaken to provide a large chunk of the funds needed for the $250,000 centre, a WUS spokesman explained.

Highlight of the two-week campaign — which is due to swing into its second week here on Monday — will be a gala SHARE dinner to be given in the Great Hall of Hart House, Monday, Barry Cooke, Toronto's SHARE chairman said. Tickets for the affair are being sold at $1.25 a plate.

Reporting on the campaign so far, Bill Crossin, the drive's finance chieftain, said last night that the University's staff has been "particularly generous" in its contributions so far.

H H Debaters Contend Canada Is Not Stuck

By a vote of 22-11, Hart House debaters upheld the contention of Edgar McInnis the honorary visitor, that Canada is "neither stuck nor in the middle".

Speaking for the motion "That this house believes that in International Affairs Canada is stuck in the Middle", Tom Hammond referred to Canada as the lynch pin in Anglo-American relations. Hammond felt that the unfortunate "Shotgun marriage" between the U.S. and Canada had forced this country into a situation of "stuckedness" and "middleness".

Opposing the motion, Peter Russell of Trinity, maintained that since Canada's international policy was a "dynamic synthesis" of the American and the British, it was impossible to say that Canada was "stuck".

Morley Marks of S.P.S. defended the motion with quotations from that "eminent authority" Mr. Edgar McInnis, author of "Some obscure high school textbook". Marks insisted that Canada was not only "stuck" and in the "middle" but that it was "stuck smack in the middle".

Final speaker on the paper, Peter Martin of U.C., presented himself as a "modest historian and philosopher". From this vantage point, he assailed those who contended that Canada was in the middle of anything.

Edgar McInnis, the honorary visitor, who is president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, pointed out what he considers to be major instances in which Canada, because of "its own mature judgement" pursued courses of action which differed markedly from those of either the United States or the United Kingdom.

Smith Announces Loans and Gifts Largest For Med

President Sidney Smith has announced a list of donations and bequests to the University, with the Faculty of Medicine being the most prominent recipient.

The list included: $100,000 from the will of the late Dr. H. A. Beatty, for medical scholarships; $10,025 from the J. P. Bickell Foundation for the Dept. of Pharmacology; $12,500 from Trinidad Leaseholds (Canada) for cardiovascular research; $10,000 from the California Research Corporation for geophysical research; $1200 anonymously for the Dept. of Medicine Special Fund 1954; and $1000 from friends of the late Dr. Appleton for a psychiatry prize.

The donations totaled approximately $150,500, with many scholarships being established.

Orchestra Associates Offer Membership To All Students

Student membership cards are still available for prospective members of the Hart House Orchestra Associates. At present these are on sale in the SAC office, the Bursar's office, Trinity College, at the Hall Porter's desk of Hart House, at the Royal Conservatory, through the Varsity and from some individuals on campus.

This organization was formed in order to provide some sort of continuing series around which Dr. Boyd Neel could build a more effective Hart House Orchestra.

A preliminary season has been organized for the spring term of 1955. First performance will be a concert on Sunday, February 27 at 8.30 p.m. in the Great Hall of Hart House.

"Up to the present, response from staff, and off-campus friends of the university has been very good", said Wendy Michener, one of the organizers of the Associates. "We believe that the students of the university will not let this opportunity to establish fine classical music on the campus be thrown away."

Future plans of the Associates call for the establishment of a concert series for the academic term of 1955-56. These plans will be carried out if response to this first concert is good, or if financial backing can be secured from sources other than the staff and students of the university.

Friends, Fun and Fatigue Carabin Weekend Result

By IRENE MEYERS

We're home, and it was wonderful — the Carabin week-end.
I mean. Many people have heard of this gala affair with its exhausting social programme, its gay humour, and its warm friendliness, but few are fortunate enough to participate in such a week-end's activities.
Those of us who have will long remember and appreciate the privilege we have received.

And what will be my memories of the Carabin week-end? I'll remember the hurry and confusion, the anxious counting of heads and luggage as we boarded the train; the excitement of a first visit to Montreal; the pleasure of renewing friendships acquired on the week-end in Toronto; the feeling that perhaps the time could well be spent on studies; and the fear that your limited knowledge of French might not be sufficient to hold out for a whole weekend.

ENTHUSIASTIC WELCOME

I'll remember the people who greeted us, their warmth and enthusiasm as they grasped our suitcases in Windsor station and led us away to "universite de Montreal." They showed us how one could laugh at oneself and astonished us with their great endurance when it came to singing — hours at a time with no sore throats or exhaustion and no inclination to stop unless forcibly restrained. Unforgettable are the enthusiasm and energy with which they entered into the spirit of party life, for not many Anglo-Saxons can ski all day, dance and sing all evening, and still be ready to "do the town".

And I'll not forget their serious side; their sincere desire to know the rest of Canada, their interest in culture as being an integral part of their own lives, and their deep attachment to their religion.

LAURENTIANS

"BEAUTIFUL"

I'll remember the fun and laughter in which all the weekend's activities were steeped; the beauty of the Laurentians with their blanket of snow; the exhilaration of skiers swooping down the snowy slopes; the long climb to the postage-stamp skating rink (with its hard ice).

Among my memories will be my first visit to a French-Canadian night-spot, even if I didn't understand most of the jokes. I'll remember the Leslie Bell Singers giving their arrangement of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and the excited French whisper making the revelation that the choristers were singing "She Went in to the Water and She Got Herself All Wet." I'll not forget Dr. Bell and his singers sitting on the floor at Dave Hobart's house entertaining us with "Hey Lollie Too Tum", even though most of their sopranos were missing.

I'll remember two of our French-Canadian friends demanding finger bowls after a delicious chicken dinner (sponsored by the City of Montreal), and the annoyed look on the waiter's face as he fulfilled the request. I'll remember Doug Hamilton's "exhausting day" (45 minutes) of skiing and John Bovey's mournful request for Hobhouse's "Liberalism" on the return trip.

Nor will I find it difficult to recall the tuneful little ditties flowing out in astounding array from the throats of the forty or fifty French-Canadians followed by a somewhat cruder and more hesitating rendition by the English Canadians.

WHAT IS A CANADIAN?

And how could I forget the avid eagerness with which we discussed "What is a Canadian?"
Hot and heavy were some of the "discussions" but the end result was always the same —
We are all Canadians, both French and English, and Canadians we'll remain.

However, I will forget the many misconceptions I had harboured of a French-Canadian.

Hold Quartet Finals Tuesday Archetypes vs. Skulemen

Next week the Skulehouse Four will meet the Archetypes in the finals of the Hart House Quartet contest. As a result of Tuesday's semi-finals, the Archetypes, defeating the Four Bits, are in the finals.

"Unfortunately, (the tenor had a cold) two quartets dropped out at the last moment," said Dave Wood, one of the Archetypes — and Editor of Torontonensis.

"Winner of next week's contest will be on the cover of Torontonensis," he added.

"The Quartet refused to have Clyde Batten, Editor of The Varsity — for obvious reasons," quipped Wood.

Tuesday the Archetypes sang
"Mood Indigo" and "Salt." Next week they intend to sing "Deep River" and "Never Throw A Lighted Lamp At Mother" — a companion song to "Keep The Home Fires Burning." Wood added: "He said there was a rumour going around that the Skulehouse Four would respond with "Never Throw A Lighted Pipe At Father."

Reduced Rates Offered Students Europe Bound

Trips to Europe are offered by NFCUS at reduced rates. Any student, post-graduate or University employee who wishes to go to the continent this summer, can do so at minimum cost by contacting the NFCUS Travel Service. Information on this is available at the SAC office.

Special student sailings and tours are offered. The sailings to Europe take place from early in May to the end of June, with return voyages scheduled as late as early September. The vessels are chartered by NFCUS for the purpose of conducting groups of students across the Atlantic. In this way the students not only see new countries, but meet people from other parts of Canada.

The tours conduct the student through a complete variety of European countries. There are ten in all, some lasting up to two months. Trained guides tell the student the best places to eat, visit, and so on. These tours are designed specifically for the student who wishes to gain what is valuable from a summer abroad.

"There is no other Travel Service which arranges its sailings and tours for students only and directs its energies specifically to procuring reduced rates for students," said Yves Pilon, NFCUS
Executive Secretary.

Last year seventy students at the University of Toronto took advantage of the NFCUS offer.

Ice Bound Nudes Play Siren Lure Cause Car Crash

A voluptuous nude, carved out of snow by playful University of Toronto students spelled trouble for two motorists on Devonshire Place yesterday.

A witness reported the motorists took their eyes off where they were going, to feast their hearts on the snow-packed curves. When they looked back on the road, they were locking bumpers.

Damage to the automobiles was reported as slight and neither driver was injured. Witnesses explained that both drivers had slowed down, presumably to get a better look.

A veritable epidemic of snow-sculpturing overtook the campus during the past couple of days.

Officials at Simcoe Hall arrived at their posts yesterday morning to be met by a reclining, 12-foot nude in front of that nerve-centre of the university.

In front of a medical men's fraternity at the St. George-Harbord corner, a heavy-bottomed female was adorned with placards which begged: "Take me to the Meds' At Home".

A fourth female figure was reported to have been fashioned out of the wet, pliable snow by students at Victoria College.

Society Picks Charles Best Chief Lecturer

One of Canada's best-known medical figures — Dr. Charles H. Best, head of the Department of Physiology here — has been named to address an annual gathering of the Royal Society in Great Britain this year.

Dr. Best will deliver the Croonian lecture of the world's oldest scientific society in London next June 16. He is the first Canadian to be invited to give such an address before the Royal Society.

The Croonian lectureship is named after Dr. Croon who held the post of registrar with the Royal Society in 1660.

Dr. Best's address will be "Dietary factors in the protection of the liver, heart and kidney".

His work has been in this field since the 1930's when he was co-discoverer of insulin with the late Sir Frederick Banting.

"Plato—as Enemy of Freedom" Topic of Classics Professors

Three University of Toronto Classics professors discussed the philosopher, Plato, as an "enemy of freedom" at a round-table discussion here Wednesday night at a joint meeting of the University College, Trinity and Victoria Classics clubs.

The three professors were: L. E. Woodbury of University College, M. D. Tait of U.C. and G. M. A. Grube of Trinity.

Professor Woodbury declared that it was Plato's contention that if the state were to be ruled wisely, the majority had to agree to be ruled by the few—the intelligent. In an imperfect society, he said, this would mean that a small absolute group would rule.

Professor Tait called Plato an enemy of freedom and cited the philosopher's restrictions on education and art as an example. He said that the majority of people in a state were not to be able to make judgments, much less control the rulers.

Professor Grube, defended the Greek philosopher. He noted that Plato trained his children in poetry and music. He said Plato considered democracy a bad form of government but among imperfect people, the least dangerous.

The Trinity professor called Plato "a dreamer" because he

Visit Dunlop On Bursaries

Increased bursary aid for Ontario university students will be the subject of a conference today between W. J. Dunlop, Ontario Minister of Education, and a delegation of U. of T. students.

The students are SAC president Bill Angus, II Law, Peter Martin, III U.C., and Norman Chalmers, III Law. The delegation is acting on behalf of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) in Ontario.

In representing the 20,000 Ontario university students, the group will ask for an additional one and a half million dollars for student aid. The meeting is preparatory to one with Premier Robert Frost and the Ontario provincial cabinet next Tuesday. A final decision on the matter must be taken on cabinet level.

According to Norm Chalmers, head of the NFCUS Bursary Committee, the delegation will present its request for scholarship aid on two levels. One will be on the basis of an urgent short-term need of aid for students who may not be able to complete their education because of financial difficulties. Current unemployment has made it impossible for many such students to obtain summer and part-time jobs, Chalmers said.

The appeal for provincial bursary aid will also be made on a long-term basis. More scholarship assistance would enable many young people to enter university who would otherwise find it impossible to do so, Chalmers said. "The wrong people are coming to university, and too many are forced to leave because of financial difficulties," he added.

Contact with the provincial government on this matter has already been made by the Bursary Committee in a meeting with Toronto and York M.P.P.'s last month. The M.P.P.'s expressed a keen interest in the proposed scholarship increases.

Situation Drastic For Peru Students Strikes Necessary

University students in Peru sometimes have to strike in order to show their disapproval of educational administration.

This was stated here at a meeting of the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students' Club.

Leading discussion at the weekly session was Manfred F. L. Rotmann, a Peruvian student attending second year Mechanical Engineering classes here.

Rotmann attributed at least some of the fire behind the student demonstrations against university authority to "the Latin temperament". He said that police sometimes appear in tanks to cope with the students.

Since the official Peruvian religion is Roman Catholicism, other religious organizations must somewhat disguise the exteriors of their churches. Rotmann explained this was to prevent the attraction of Roman Catholics to other religions.

Describing the humid climate of Peru, the student said it caused approximately fifty per cent of the population there to have some form of tuberculosis.

The FROS club invites a foreign student on the campus here each week to answer questions about his country. Students are invited to attend the informal gatherings, held Tuesdays at 1.00 p.m., at 45 St. George St. Opening next week's discussion will be three French co-eds now studying here.

of his way of life, of his ideas, and of his likes and dislikes.

But most of all I'll remember why the Carabin week-end was first conceived and why it has been of such vital importance ever since its inception. World University Service Has Orientation Prospective Travellers Discuss Problems

If you are planning an overseas trip to Europe this summer, you'll want to read this, says Ron Gould of the World University Service's Toronto committee.

"Particulars about European travel which will be useful to students travelling on the continent will be discussed next Wednesday," Gould said, "at a meeting sponsored by Toronto WUS."

About six men students turned up last Wednesday, he said for the first "orientation" meeting.

This coming Wednesday's meeting, he said would be held in Room 4 of University College at 1 p.m.

Problems suggested at this week's meeting were quite varied, Gould said. He reported that they took in European exchange rates, where and how to get the best accommodation, the best methods of transportation, how to get the best meals, how to meet students of different countries, and how to attend international conferences.

"Quite a bit of enthusiasm was aroused," said Gould.

Next week, he said, Europe will be divided up into countries, and each country will be discussed separately. The methods of transportation, to and in each country, language barriers, exchange rates, the black market, and any other interesting problems, will be dealt with, he said.

The following week a different line of interests will be the topic for discussion, he said. He emphasized that all meetings were free to any student interested in going to Europe, Asia, India, etc., whether or not through the World University Service, or the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Quality of Mercy

In recent days the world has been treated to some heartening news. Facts and figures released in Washington, demonstrate that the new Hydrogen Bomb can now devastate an area of over 2500 square miles, or destroy everything between here and Kingston.

It is incredible that many leaders of the so-called "Western World" still insist that the only way to guarantee peace is to indulge in the most concerted preparations for war, — preparations which, in weight of destructive power, are unparalleled in history.

There is something utterly fatuous and inherently fallacious, in the idea that peace can be assured by these means. To maintain this antiquated stand in the face of present developments, is absurd, if not suicidal.

In truth the battle between Russian Communism and Western Democracy has already been joined and, to a large extent, decided in many areas of the world. The plain unvarnished fact is that we have lost that fight.

Why have we failed so ignominiously? Probably because our passion for goods and production has so consumed us, so captivated our imagination, that we have slept while the battle for men's minds has been waged.

In a recent television interview, Nehru of India said when questioned about the Asian policy of the U.S., "Mere military power is not enough when you're dealing with millions of people. You must win their minds, as well."

While we have been operating on the assumption that peace can be secured by military bases abroad and television sets at home, we have ignored the facts of human existence, trampled the intelligence of man in the dust, and degraded the human spirit beyond measure.

We have refused to recognize that a man captivated by an ideal will tolerate any kind of physical discomfort for the propagation of that belief. We have permitted our media of communication to direct their efforts towards a level, which by their own admission, is that of a fourteen year old child. We have insisted on foisting our "western" preoccupation with the toys and mountebanks of our society upon the rest of the nations of the world.

Since we have perpetrated these crimes and perpetrated ignorance, it is fitting that we should grow aware of our own ineptitude abroad, and our ineffectual muddlings at home.

The cost we pay must be recognition of failure. The fine to be levied however will not be of our choosing. We can only pray for mercy.

Science vs. Humanities Is There a Conflict?

(This is the third in a series of articles about the WUS seminar held at Caledon on the question "Education — For What?")

The group defined technology and the humanities as categories of discipline. The question was then put, "why do we need technicians?" It was generally held that whether we like it or not, we live in a technological society and our fellow countrymen are either unwilling or unable to change it. Therefore technicians are necessary.

But where do they fit in? If man can only be explained in terms of the humanities, what is the technician's place? This is the decision of the university. The thesis that the university's function is to train a man to think, was propounded and accepted. Further, the disciplines of the sciences are amoral; they deal with things which, in themselves, are neither bad nor good. The scientist works with things, but it is not up to him to decide what should be done with them.

Such is the duty of the humanist. As a student of man, it is his responsibility, for which his training should have prepared him, to make moral decisions which will affect men, rather than things. Man is the repository of the concepts of good and evil. This is not to say that a scientist cannot make moral judgements, but that when he does so, he is acting not as a scientist, but as a human being.

Further, the scientist should be taught the limitations of his subject, that science is the handmaiden of the humanities. Similarly, the embryonic humanist should be shown his place in society, that he has to understand what the scientist is trying to do and how to handle his inventions.

How is the teacher of humanists to point out to the next generation how to act? It was agreed, finally but reluctantly, that for the sake of stability, some of the criteria of the present generation should be passed on.

How much was never decided, for it involved the fundamental question on which the discussion ran aground. When Truman decided to use the atom bomb, he was sailing on uncharted seas. The argument that he should be left to work out his own criteria was rejected by the Christians as involving a faith in reason that was too far-reaching. Their reply, that his thinking should be guided from the beginning at least in part by religious precepts, was rejected by the free thinkers as involving an unwarranted faith in God.

At this point, the group ceased to exist to all intents and purposes. We found it impossible either to convince each other or to dodge the issue. Thus, having raised a series of questions and found a few answers, we disbanded.

The Editor,

Your CUP Runneth Over Column, which in recent times has become the more or less ultimate resting place for stale jokes from the Saskatchewan Sheaf went out of its way on February 11th to print an excerpt from the Colorado Daily dealing with the teaching of evolution in state supported schools. The comments attributed to the Rev. Gladden William James aroused my curiosity.

First, Rev. James remarked that the teaching of evolution is a question of religion and not one of science. While it cannot be denied that there are grave philosophical and theological implications in evolutionary thought especially where it relates to man, for the reason that man is very much more than an animal, the fact remains that organic evolution is the rightful field of science because what is studied is essentially a natural phenomenon of universal occurrence which can be investigated by the empirical and inductive method of science.

While it may not be evident to persons who are unfamiliar with the biological sciences (and I can only classify Rev. James in this group), some concept of evolution is as old as scientific enquiry itself, and can certainly be traced to the early Ionian Philosophers. It is the basis of modern biological thought, and to teach any of the biological sciences without mentioning concepts of evolution can be as meaningless as to teach theology without mentioning God.

The factual evidence for an evolutionary process is so overwhelming and from such a variety of sources that no person who has the full use of his reason can reject the idea that evolution has occurred. Furthermore, he has only to stop, observe and think, to realize that evolution is proceeding before his very eyes. If only the anti-evolutionists would become familiar with a selection of the basic principles of such subjects as comparative anatomy, embryology, physiology, biochemistry, ecology, genetics and palaeontology, they would not fail to distinguish the dual nature of evolutionary thought: the question of whether evolution occurs and the problem of the mechanism which makes it a process.

The need for a Foundation for the Authenticity of the Bible seems rather superfluous, for if God is its effective author, the authenticity is surely established and only the human interpretation can err. And certainly Religious Liberty will never be achieved in an environment of intellectual slavery. "Seek and you shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you"; and again, "The truth shall make you free". As rational beings we have an obligation to seek after truth, and if God exists, it follows that the Unity of Truth also exists.

Finally, Rev. James concludes "we don't mind having books by evolutionists in the library, because that is following the idea of freedom of speech and the press". If he is so convinced the evolutionists are in error, how can he sanction its spread in any form: if he is not certain, how can he condemn the presentation of the idea. The only other alternative would be to assume that Rev. James had his proverbial tongue in his cheek all along. If this is the case, then it is eminently fitting that the article should have appeared in your CUP Runneth Over Column which, I understand, is supposed to be humorous.

Mr. Hugh D. McKellar, to whom "religious faith is as natural and as necessary as breathing", has advertised for an atheist. It is difficult to believe that he has so far been unable to find one; for although not entirely fashionable today, Atheism still manages to survive. Indeed, if atheists are as uncommon as Mr. McKellar would have us believe, why is he interested in an explanation of their viewpoint?

Nonetheless, we, the undersigned, would be pleased to meet Mr. McKellar and discuss his doubts with him. Most of us are looked upon as atheists by our colleagues although, in the main, we call ourselves agnostics. But at least one of us is an atheist. We don't know which. We all suspect one another.

Finally, we can assure Mr. McKellar that we will not lose our tempers.

VARSITY OSCAR TO MARCHING SONG

John Whiting's Marching Song, now showing at the Crest, may well prove to be one of the most important plays of the twentieth century. On one viewing and with some doubt as to whether certain weaknesses are attributable to play or production, it would take a more experienced critic than I to deliver a final evaluation. My own impression was almost wholly favourable.

John Whiting's subject in this play is the man of destiny who is committed to action in all circumstances. He can never turn away from a situation in the face of which he feels insufficient; he cannot even accept it passively; he must always take some positive step, wholly commit himself to some course. This is not a man ruled by a Fate which is an impersonal, implacable external force, as we moderns conceive it; this is rather a man possessed of a Greek destiny, a destiny which accompanies him through life, both growing with him and making him what he is.

The Plot

The man of destiny in Marching Song is Rupert Forster, a European general who returns to his home and sentimental mistress after seven years of imprisonment for mishandling a vital campaign which contributed to his country's defeat in war. Conquered and disgraced, with no hope of finding a new field of accomplishment, Forster looks with bleak eyes upon a future which offers nothing but an attempt to regain the happiness of the past. He is in this mood when he learns that his release has been procured only so that he may be put on trial as a scape-goat for the defeat. The country's Chancellor Cadmus pays him a visit to disclose this; he continues with a request that Forster prevent the trial, which would throw the country into hysteria and destroy the Chancellor's work of rehabilitation, by secretly committing suicide. Thanks to the humanity and depth of Donald Davis' performance in this role the Chancellor is a believable and sympathetic force in the play, a man, like Forster, embracing his destiny, not a mere personification of cruel fate or the thoughtless power of the state.

Forster is ready enough to agree to the proposal; memories are empty comfort for a man whose very life consists in reaching forward. There would be no conflict were it not for the intervention of his mistress, Catherine, who, although she has the courage which enables a human being to endure day by day suffering, has not the valiant daring to face the future as a whole or to commit herself wholly to anything. For Catherine, even a crumb of a loaf is better than none. And so, although she has been forced to realize that Forster no longer loves her, she fights against the Chancellor to prevent what seems cruel waste to her, who cannot understand that for some men under some circumstances death is not a negation of life but a culmination of action.

The Crisis

The other two important characters in the play are weapons in the battle for Forster's life — or death. The Chancellor makes use of a ne'er-do-well American film maker, a man with a vision he cannot follow, to give Forster a hint of what he would face should he decide to stand trial and live. Catherine pins her faith on an independent, disillusioned little girl, Dido, whom the film maker has brought into the household, hoping that Forster's sudden affection for her will persuade him that in her youth and love he can find sufficient reason for life, even under the wretched conditions imposed on a semi-acquitted war criminal. And thus, unwittingly, Catherine casts the deciding vote in his resolution to kill himself. Any hesitation which had attacked him is dispelled by his realization, through Dido's freshness and vitality, of the glory which life should be and of the miserable facsimile which his existence would become. A man committed to action can never remain passive — and as Dido points out, a defeated general without his army can never be anything but passive. So Forster dies, because dying is the only way left in which he can take action.

The Meaning

The tremendous integrity which pervades the working out of this conflict, the absolute rightness of Rupert Forster's life and death, make this play a great intellectual and tragic achievement. Its shortcomings of dramatic construction (if this really is where the fault lies) do not even come near to spoiling it, but I am sure that their correction would greatly heighten the tragic intensity of the play. Part of the play's greatness lies in the reality, the depth and roundness, of the most important characters, Forster and the Chancellor. This, of course, is emphasized by the excellent performance given these roles, better than any performances which I have yet seen from either of the Davises. Murray Davis, as the General, never for a moment suggested a man under the power of someone else; he was always completely master of himself and his fate. The tenseness and anguish of Forster's living might have made his death seem a relief instead of triumph, but Mr. Davis made it clear that for Forster, agony was conquered by the joy of being sufficiently alive to feel it.

Weaknesses

Possibly the slightly fuzzy overall effect of the play is caused by the equally brilliant characterization of lesser figures who should interest the audience, not as personalities in their own right, but as influences upon the protagonists. I am still undecided, however, as to whether this is the fault of the playwright or of the production. My suspicion is inclined toward the production by the fact that Frances Hyland as Dido is the most appealing character by far, apart from the hero, and that this is true because Miss Hyland is not playing Dido Morgen, an instrument in the decision of Forster's fate, but Frances Hyland as she would be if she happened to be a member of the disillusioned younger generation of war-torn Europe. Miss Hyland has a wonderfully appealing manner and personality, but in approaching her audience so directly she captures their hearts while distracting their attention. It is not, however, the best way to fulfill the actor's duty of subordinating himself to the greater whole of the play.

Barbara Chilcott as Catherine and Budd Knapp as the reality-fleeing American are also distracting because they do not seem to be doing their parts full justice. Miss Chilcott in particular displays a surprising ungainliness in characterization.

But the weak points are few and their importance pales beside the enormous worth of the production. This is a play to be seen and discussed and seen again. It seems to me very possible that it will make a noticeable contribution to the current search for a solid base on which to build a drama of satisfying integrity. John Whiting has not turned to the present favourites, mime and poetic drama; nor, on the other hand, has he taken refuge in the school of Shaw and Ibsen. His tragic tenets are the classic ones of Sophocles; they seem to ring wonderfully true.

art, music and drama the painters' eleven

What appears to be Toronto's one attempt in the year to be really avant-garde may be viewed this month until the 26th at Roberts Gallery, just below Brittell's on Yonge, 759 to be exact. On the brochure, which is perhaps the best bit of design in the show, there is the following statement: "There is no manifesto here for the times. There is no jury but time. By now there is little harmony in the noticeable disagreement. But there is a profound regard for the consequences of our complete freedom." In style it is dated, belonging more to the early Ezra Pound or Wyndham Lewis. In thought it seems to me to be a little too pretentious for the paintings within.

Last year, when I discussed this show, I tried to suggest that you can't examine art, contemporary or otherwise, as you would examine a detailed drawing of the interior of a frog, that is if you were interested in frogs. A painting, any painting, is more important than you are and if you have to approach it with respect it is because a work of art can tell you something and who are you to say that your three year old child, supposing you had one, could do better. Yet there is nearly always someone at any collection of modern paintings who is standing around laughing. What is there about a mess of colours that can make a man laugh? It is more likely that our viewer is confronted with something he can't understand and hasn't the guts to admit it.

I spend quite a lot of time looking at pictures, and perhaps occasionally I even go so far as to think. For that reason I always find it slightly embarrassing to admit that in my opinion a collection of paintings could be a lot better than it is. Because this year's eleven painters are just a little discouraging. To begin with few of them are making more than a mild affirmation of their personality. There is very little violence, rather a smug disorder, a self-satisfied dissonance directed at the rest of us. A few of the painters, Hortense Gordon, whom I have never liked, Tom Hodgson, and Alexander Luke, are still using last year's motifs but have blown them up, put them under a more powerful magnifying glass. The child, feeling more confident, is taking bigger steps but still coming back to mummy's lap. Kazuo Nakamura has one good canvas, Interior and both Ray Mead and Cahen have interesting studies. The latter, especially, nearly always manages to say something, to put across some emotion, or feeling, or even a movement.

Sometimes, always if he is any good, an artist will try to suggest one thought only in his paintings, and that thought is usually very simple and perhaps one that, if we knew it, we would say 'Oh, of course, I have always known that'. If this is so then why bother painting it? Because it may be that through the artist's eyes we may be able to understand this whatever it is a little better, to live with it to our own greater advantage. It's only a 'may be' but for the artist it's the worth the chance.

But a painting must say something to begin with, and you can't communicate just by painting patterns without ideas, nor can you communicate by copying someone else's work unless you also understand what he was trying to do and even then they are not your ideas. Well, if you're interested in art, or life, or even if you're not and why the Hell should you be, I always say take a walk over to the Roberts Gallery. The exercise and fresh air will do you good and you'll have something to talk about over coffee. T. M. Daly

Boyd Neel and TSO

At least for two nights this week the TSO seemed at times to cast off the unwieldy cocoon of workaday routine by the resuscitating vigour and sensitivity of Dr. Boyd Neel. While during the greater part of this season, the orchestra was more or less homogeneous in tone quality, last Wednesday we could appreciate the structurally defined roles of individual instruments with considerable clarity.

Dr. Neel as an accomplished analyst of orchestral sound is meticulously aware of the functional necessity of meticulous instrumental balance. This tonal perceptivity is perhaps to be attributed to extensive experience in small ensemble work which demands great emphasis on the clear division and interaction of individual instruments.

Dr. Neel's mastery of contrast and coordination was perhaps most manifest in Mozart's Haffner Serenade in which the balanced blending of strings with light wind instruments challenged the players to a great deal of self control. The frequently changing structural pattern calls for the greatest possible rhythmic and tonal balance. Dr. Neel's performance of this type of small ensemble work as it was to be expected revealed very great sensitivity which was heightened by a most intelligent phrasing. The same qualities of charm, vigour and coordination were expressed in the second movement of Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B flat major in which alternating instruments gracefully state and interweave the unobtrusive theme.

Dr. Neel's competence in directing the full orchestra was far below the level of his small group performances. It appeared that he was unable to realize orchestral dynamics to the full extent and so the rest of the works lacked in colour. In Rossini's overture to the Italian in Algiers most of the exciting qualities of sudden change were substituted by a rather puritan taste for moderation. Instead of contrast Dr. Neel's emphasis was on overly balanced too evenly measured dynamics.

While Gustav Holst's ballet music to the Perfect Fool escaped the inertia of the Rossini, Elgar's Enigma Variations lacked in functional continuity due to an over-emphasis on detail.

It is indeed very hard to diagnose Dr. Neel's deficiencies as symphonic conductor at first hearing. Our notions of Dr. Neel's profound musicianship are difficult to reconcile with his apparent difficulties with a large orchestral group. Yet it is both strange and in a negative way gratifying that even these works in which Dr. Neel does not come quite up to his usual level are not devoid of charm, vigour, and intelligence.

BAD DAY AT BLACK ROCK BLENDS BACKDROPS

Since motion picture screens have become large, there has been an unfortunate tendency on the part of producers to extend their films to exaggerated and boring length. This is not to suggest that brevity is, in itself, the soul of a good movie. But a picture should be intelligently edited, the waste and lapses chopped out. Armed with cinemascope and other widescreen processes, producers have been carried away with views of landscapes and cities that are beautiful but simply a waste of time when injected in the middle of a narrative.

That's why it is refreshing to see a movie like Bad Day at Black Rock, which is currently being shown on Loew's gigantic screen. The M-G-M brains behind this opus have sliced away all the wastage and made a tight, grim and concise little drama out of a somewhat illogical story. And they have been able to use cinemascope magnificently, by blending backdrops and vistas of the craggy west into the fabric of their story.

The plot opens when the streamliner stops at Black Rock, a handful of shanties on the edge of the prairie, and deposits a taciturn stranger who affects that sordid little hamlet as if, as one of the characters later says, "it had been bombed" out. The stranger quite innocently probes about the place and stumbles on the skeleton in the municipal closet. The folks get hysterical and when they attempt to scare off the stranger he refuses to stampede and, through intelligence and a remarkable display of unarmed hand-to-hand combat cleans up the whole mystery. And at the same time, punches home a bit of a message.

Spencer Tracy plays the intruder with close-lipped and calm brilliance. The rest of the cast is equally good. This includes Robert Ryan as the despotic and menacing boss of the town and the guiltiest party. Walter Brennan is a philosophic undertaker, Dean Jagger an alcoholic sheriff, John Ericson a cowardly hotel-keeper, Ann Francis his bitchy sister and there is a retinue of heavies, including Lee Marvin and the person who was the sadistic sergeant in From Here to Eternity.

The hero of the piece, however, is the director.

One-Eyed Benny

Speaking ^{OF} SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Roughly a month ago the President released his annual report on the state of the University of Toronto for 1953-54. And while he made reference to a new building to house the women athletes on this campus, he neglected to mention any possibility of the appearance of one of the most needed additions to the University's grounds — a Field House.

Every year somebody sounds off about the need for one of those mammoth constructions that seat about 4,000 people, and have basketball floors at least three times the size of the one in Hart House; to say nothing of squash courts, wrestling gyms, and a swimming pool a little more than seven feet deep beneath the diving board. And just as regularly everybody ignores these plaintive requests that issue year by year. And now the women are almost sure of getting themselves a brand new Union, and not only that, they're building it in just about the only spot left on the campus for a Field House.

Actually there's no reason why the women shouldn't come first. Right now they've virtually nothing in the way of permanent athletic facilities. The only trouble is that they're liable to come first and last, and that's what hurts. Niagara University, a school with an enrollment of about 2,000 students, has found a gold mine in a Field House that seats upwards of 3,500 spectators. Not so long ago the University of British Columbia built a Field House to honor the memory of graduates who fell in the Second World War. The basketball floor there is at least as wide as the Hart House court is long, and four Hart House floors would fit crosswise on it. Besides that there is another gymnasium in the building for the gymnasts, and wrestling and boxing rooms. A regulation length outdoor swimming pool rests alongside the building, a leftover from the British Empire Games last summer.

The other five universities competing in the Eastern Intercollegiate league all have courts much larger than that of the University of Toronto. Most of us have seen Thames Hall at London, or the Currie Memorial Gym at McGill; and Queen's, McMaster and Assumption all have far more suitable accommodation than that presently afforded the Varsity basketball team. In the past the Blues have often defeated superior teams with a tight zone defence, tough to break on the Hart House half-court, but this will not always be the case. One must remember that Hart House was built quite some time ago, and its facilities are rapidly growing out of step with the times. There really isn't any argument in favor of the basketball accommodations now offered on this campus.

A few years ago there was a great hue and cry about a Student Union, which died out just as quickly as it started. In a Field House of decent size all the advantages of a student union could be built, in fact it could be a centre of activity for the campus. One can't say that Intercollegiate basketball wouldn't draw crowds as it does in the States, for St. Michael's Gym is generally packed for the Tri Bells' games, and even Hart House is well-filled for a Saturday Athletic Night. The presence of a Field House on this campus would be a tremendous incentive to basketball in Toronto, and not only that, but the Athletic Association would begin to make some of that long sought-after money to increase student athletic facilities. It gets pretty rough when the drawing power of the Varsity football team has to support all the other major and minor sports on the campus.

Of course the next question is what do we do with Hart House after we've built a new structure to house all the students' athletic facilities. Perhaps they could forget about a new women's union, direct the funds to a new Field House, and turn the Hart House Athletic Wing over to the girls — they've taken over pretty near all the rest of it now anyway.

The plan most often suggested in lieu of a new Field House is that of turning Varsity Arena into a dual sport building, for both hockey and basketball. From basketball's point of view this is a tremendous improvement, as the 4,000-odd seating capacity of the Arena is almost as good as having a Field House. From hockey's point of view, it makes little difference, except that the Saturday night revenue of THL hockey might be somewhat diminished.

The proposal is to have a portable basketball floor which can be set up and removed with the greatest of ease in a matter of hours. Since there is not a cement floor under the ice in Varsity Arena, it would be impossible to completely remove the ice as is done in the Maple Leaf Gardens, unless, of course, the University was to go to the expense of installing such a floor. At any rate the ice would be refrozen faster if the portable floor was used instead of having to completely remove the ice for each game.

Whichever answer is eventually adopted, a new Field House or the renovation of Varsity Arena, the net result will be the same — better basketball teams to draw better crowds and fill the coffers of the Athletic Association to a pleasant balance. The final result of such an improvement can be far-reaching and extremely beneficial to the men on the campus, as well as the women.

From the Blue Room . . . We have evidently injured the pride of several Westerners on the campus. The Winnipeg Monarchs won the Memorial Cup in 1946, not St. Mike's . . . Intercollegiate Ski meet in Montreal this weekend.

Blues Face Assumption Title Chances At Stake

Varsity's Basketball Blues can either win against the visiting Assumption Purple Raiders in Hart House tomorrow night, or they can forget about championships for this season and concentrate on being good-natured also-rans. Judging by past performances of the two clubs their fate will be the latter, but considering the latent power of those big Blues, they could just as well finish off those Assumptions and go on for the title. Everything depends on the temperature.

If it's a hot night for Varsity, then good, but if it's a cold night, then bring out the crying towels. The Blues haven't played consistently good ball for two games in a row, yet this season, though they have managed to show bad form with far greater persistence. Since almost all their bad games have been played on the road, hometown fans find it hard to understand how they lose at all. Now, with the most important game yet this year coming up, the Blues showed excellent form against the highly-ranked Niagara Purple Eagles, but whether they can continue this way is another question.

For the Raiders, a powerhouse every bit as strong as the Varsity club takes to the floor in the Purple. At guard is flash George Joseph, the hot-shot who fizzled here last year, but has been great in almost every other match, playing with former St. Mike's man Hugh Coyle, a fast, sharp, and outstanding team man with a quick eye for defensive flaws. At centre is Chuck Collini, a tallish fellow who, while being a bit slow, is nevertheless more effective than most Varsitytypes around the hoop. Supporting this cast are such as Lou Verres, the dependable star of several seasons and newcomer Ray Triano, a new man with amazing ability on the court.

Ice Blues Play In Montreal Can Win Title Friday Night

Varsity's hockey Blues can bring home the Queen's Cup for the first time since 1951, by defeating either the McGill Redmen or the University of Montreal Carabins this weekend in Montreal.

McGill, who up until last week were considered threats to win the title, lost to the Carabins 4-2 on Tuesday, thus practically eliminating themselves from the race. Now nine points behind the Blues with only five games left, the Tribe must win all their remaining contests while the Blues lose all theirs in order to win the Intercollegiate championship.

After whipping the Redmen 4-0 in Varsity Arena last week, the Blues are expected to have little trouble with the Tribe on the large ice surface in the Montreal Forum. Coach Jack Kennedy will ice the same team that shut out the Tribe in last Friday's contest, and it will be an opportunity for the Blues to boost their scoring totals at the expense of McGill netminder Bernie Wong. When you come right down to it, Wong is about the only thing liable to halt the Blue attack.

Saturday night the Blues will meet the Carabins for the last time this season in the Verdun Auditorium. In their last meeting in Verdun, the Carabins held the Blues to a 1-1 draw, and they could well be a thorn in the Blue side after subduing the Redmen Tuesday night. However, all considered, it's more than likely that the Blues will return from old Quebec with another major Intercollegiate title.

Irish Grab Second Position Swamping UC Redmen 9-1

By JOHN VOJTECH

St. Mike's A's took second place in the Division 1, Group 2 intramural hockey standings yesterday, as they literally swamped Sr. U.C. 9-1 at Varsity Arena. Frank Gioioma was the big gun as far as the Irish were concerned, as he potted three goals.

The Irish outshot the U.C. team 46-6 in the game. One of the main U.C. faults was that they were unable to get hold of rebounds both in their territory and in the Irish territory. Joe Horvat came through with his usual reliable performance as he scored two goals. Ron Sheppard, Bill Reddall, Guy Drolet and Mike O'Neill scored the other Irish goals.

Charlie Logue spoiled Paul Andrews' bid for his fourth consecutive shut out, as he slipped one by the St. Mike's goalie with but three minutes left to play in the game. Herb Greenstein, Jim Smart and Bruce Sonley also played well for U.C.

John Halligan, Jerry Lawless, Chuck Stock and Ollie Kostyk played well for the Irish. Bill Reddall and Garth Wadsworth came up with an able performance on the Irish defence.

The Trinity A hockey team developed a sudden case of the early morning blues as they were dropped by Jr. SPS 2-0 in an early morning affair. Bielawski and Gray scored for the winners as George German came up with a shutout. This leaves the two teams deadlocked in first place in Division 1, Group 2.

McGill Hosts In Ski Tournament

This week-end, in conjunction with McGill University's annual Winter Carnival, the Montreal school will be hosts for the Intercollegiate Ski Meet.

The University of Toronto's entry will compete for team and individual honors with McGill, Queen's, Laval, and the University of Montreal for the U. of M. Trophy, won last season by Laval University. Individual honors were taken last winter by Al Ham of McGill, who won the Allen Trophy.

The Varsity team will be composed of two members of last year's squad, Jorgen Myhre and Peter Bowen, as well as Jim Britton, Don Esson, and the McIntyre brothers, Dave and Bill.

Med IV defeated Trinity C's 3-0 on Wednesday. Shields, Williams and Jones scored for the Doctors, Larry Mudie picked up the shut-out. Emmanuel, led by a two goal effort by Strap, trounced Wycliffe, 6-1. Davies, Reid, Cooke and Benn scored one each for the winners. Adams scored the losers' lone tally.

Court Comments

By BILL CORCORAN

What happened to the Blues? What can you tell a guy that asks you this? You can't tell him the truth that you lose a toughie Friday night, as some ref gets technical happy in the last three minutes; the time-out cools off the club, the Raiders stuff in two fast hoops and before you know it, one game is out the window. Back to the hotel to moan over those easy ones that would have meant the ball game — never did sleep so well in those hotel rooms. Up next morning and on the train for Londontown. Kick around the afternoon at a flick, dinner, and then up to the gym.

The Intermediate game is half over and you cheer on your club. It's a big airy gym, and most of the guys who play there are big atry guys. You go up and shake hands with their ball club. Everyone is smiling and laughing, like a girls' tea party. They're cocky, they sure are cocky. They've won nine straight championships and know they're going to make it ten. Too bad you lost to Assumption last night, they say. That really hurts them, just like a thousand bucks in their pocket would hurt them. How have they got the nerve to give us that old baloney? But we're going to give it to them. We'll hammer them. We're really going to make them cry.

The pep talks are over and the game is about to begin. You're so tense, you think you might be able to step right out of your skin. Even before the game, the crowd's giving you the razz, and they're giving Coach the full treatment. The booing the club gets is nothing compared to that which the coach gets. This makes you even sorer, for you're playing, and he isn't. You can shut them up with a couple of hoops but he can't. And besides, you know the punks with the loudest voices never played anything anyway.

The game begins and they're still smiling. Old Jawn's smiling, ten ballplayers are smiling, the timer's smiling, and 2,000 fans, when not shouting, are smiling. You're loose now — and mad, and determined to really give them the business.

They start out like they own the hoop. We're not hitting. We're down five. We're fighting the ball — down nine. Call a time-out — listen to that crowd — let's give it to them. We hit for one — they get it back and add a couple and are really rolling at the half.

The second half starts badly. We cannot hit that hoop. We've switched offence, defence, checked our watches and said our prayers, but still the ball won't go in the hoop. The only thing topping their shooting is the smiles on their faces. The raspberry is resounding down in resonant crescendo after resonant crescendo from 2,000 loyal throats. Thirty seconds to go and you're still driving. You've got to beat them, you've got to hammer them — you've got to — game over — you lose. Not another minute, no more time, nothing — and they licked you. Then you know what Coleridge means when he says "All, all alone on a wide, wide sea". Time has run out and you have lost. And you know there won't really be a next time because this time you lost and you can't change that.

So you say, "Well chum, if you want to know why the Blues lost, it's because they're just playing the game for the fun of it. To win or to lose doesn't matter at all."

"Yeah, but why do they keep score then, wise guy".

Ice Seconds Lace Ryerson 5-1 Borthwick Leads Blues With 2

Led by the two-goal effort of clever winger Don Borthwick the Varsity hockey Seconds lashed out for four tallies in the last two periods of yesterday's game at Varsity Arena to trounce the Ryerson Rams 5-1. The win made up in some measure for the humiliation suffered just three weeks ago when the Rams held the Blues to a 4-4 tie.

The Blues seemed to be much improved over their last home appearance against Queen's, and controlled most of the play throughout the game. Barry Smith drew first blood for the Intermediates at 1:35 of the opening frame, but Ryerson captain Bernie McIver got it back moments later, beating Al Fleming with a hard shot from the corner.

The Blues took a comfortable 3-1 lead in the second period on goals by Bill Naylor and Borthwick, and then coasted into a commanding 5-1 margin in the final stanza as Borthwick notched his second and Ted Rogers finished it off.

Ryerson were much weaker than usual, especially around their own net, and an unsure defence gave goalie Jim Johnston little protection from the constant Blue attack. Standouts for the Rams were McIver, and clever playmaker Ron Scarcello.

Best for the Intermediates were Chuck Bull on defence, and Borthwick and Ted Lotocki up front. Varsity netminder Al Fleming had little work to do, but stifled several dangerous Ryerson thrusts in the second period.

Temper flared momentarily in the third frame, after a relatively peaceful opening, stanza, and a fight in the dying minutes of the game marred an otherwise fast, good hockey game.

Sr. UC Tops Dents 49-42 Skule, Beagles, Trin. Win

By MAX ROSENTHAL

On Wednesday afternoon the Junior U.C. basketball team scored a 49-42 win over Dent A. avenging their previous loss to Dents, and coming through with their best effort of the year.

Howard "Red" Dick of U.C. set the ball rolling as he scored ten of his fifteen points in the first period. When he wasn't scoring Dick was setting up centre Gary Vipond, who scored fourteen.

The Dentsmen lacked scoring punch, and consequently, trailed for most of the game. Bill Schwetz of Dents was high man of the game with 17 points, scoring with both hands from close in. Larry Scott of U.C. hooped

On the same day Junior Skule continued their winning ways scoring 60 to Junior Vic's 39. The tall men of Vic were unable to rebound successfully letting the ball be stolen several times. Skule's aggressiveness and teamwork contributed immensely to their victory.

Skule's best man was Bill Karpinski with 13, who was not only scoring but was rebounding, and passing well. Dick Jaworski with twelve and Sergio Pellegini with 10 were Skule's other high men. Tom Pockington and Bill McMinn were Vic's top scorers with eleven and ten respectively.

Yesterday afternoon a large scoring spree by Law A's in the first period was the deciding factor contributing to the Beagles' victory over Pre-Meds. Although Meds outscored Law 16-13 and 16-15 in the second and third periods, Law's 23-14 lead in the first period enabled them to win. Ed Luck of Law was high man with 19 and Jack Iwanicki followed with 15. Pete Davidson and Gerry Lansky, both of Meds, scored twelve and ten respectively. Trinity A's walloped SPS III's 51-31 for their first victory this season, in the late afternoon game.

POT, UC Tie In Gals Hockey

In girls' hockey action yesterday at noon, U.C. II and POT II played to a 2-2 tie. The play in all three periods was extremely even with both teams getting their share of the breaks. In the first period, both teams failed to capitalize on breakaways. The Physot team seemed to have better organization on their offensive plays, but just failed to put the puck behind U.C.'s goalie, Joan Rudson.

Carol Creelman opened the scoring in the second period to put POT in front by a score of 1-0. It was only a few minutes later when Shirley Frid skated in to beat Helen Alves and tie the score. There was no more scoring in this period with the teams scrambling continuously for the puck.

Shirley Frid put U.C. ahead for the first time in the game in the early minutes of the final period. Physots put on the pressure to get the equalizer and finally Betty Kempton scored one to end the game in a tie.

Cage Seconds Beaten

By TOM WILLIAMS

Led by the sensational scoring of big Ed McClay, the Ryerson Rams handed Varsity's Baby Blues a solid 66-53 setback in a fast-moving basketball game played at the Ryerson gym last night.

McClay hit for twenty-seven points, nineteen in the second half when the Blues had switched from a fairly successful zone to a loose man-to-man defence.

Recovering from an early shooting and passing lapse, the Baby Blues began to function as an offensive unit with five minutes remaining in the first half. Hoops by Ruby Richman and Ed Rigby, and the smooth playmaking of Jerry Wojdon, sparked them into a 23-18 half-time lead.

However, this margin was short-lived as McClay turned on the scoring power, hooping ten to restore the early Ryerson edge. The Blues kept close until midway in the half and then faded badly, the Rams winning going away.

The Blues had defeated the Rams 72-63 earlier this season, but bad shooting, and the uncertainty of the Ryerson ace made this one a reverse decision. Although appearing strong in the first half, the Blues were a shade off their usual form, shooting mostly from the outside in a vain effort to solve the Ryerson zone.

Jack Thompson and Mike Babulic controlled the defensive backboard for the Rams, while McClay outjumped the Blues under their own hoop. John Daeyshyn was the only outstanding Blue in this department while hooping twelve to top the Varsity club.

SHARE Auction

Dean Brings Poor Price

A paper drinking straw went on the block and was sold for two dollars as brisk trading resumed at Trinity's annual SHARE Auction.

The market was slow on Wednesday, the first day of the auction, and saw an English bicycle go for six dollars and seventy-five cents. A St. Hilda's group was able to pick up a red light for eighty cents, and an ancient typewriter brought in four dollars.

The Dow-Jones average picked up considerably yesterday as organized syndicates began to monopolize the field. Heavy bidding marked the sale of a freshe as freshmen raised the selling price to fifty dollars. A rotund dean of residence brought in thirty-seven dollars from more value-conscious female sophomores.

One of the highlights of the auction was the appearance of a Wycliffe syndicate. Early Thursday morning a group of Trinity students was discovered blocking Wycliffe's main entrance with snow under the leadership of a police constable. In the ensuing melee, the head of college was relieved of his left shoe which was put on the block as a cactus pot during the auction that afternoon. Spirited bidding marked the sale of this objet d'art. The Wycliffe group was unable to match a Trinity bid of fifty-one dollars.

In the final minutes of the auction, a SHARE-conscious sophomore was noticed to slip behind a group of her friends and emerge with a lacy black half-slip. Scott Symons, official auctioneer closed the sale with this item.

Crick Ketchum, Head of Arts, estimated that proceeds amounted to two hundred dollars.

Ottawa—Negotiations between student representatives from Carleton, St. Patrick's, Ottawa University and the Ottawa Theatre Managers' Association have recently been concluded and as a result, student admission to all Ottawa movie-theatres will be substantially lower.

Two students of Ottawa University approached the Theatre Managers' Association on their own initiative with no Student mandate. They later enlisted the support of representatives of the other two Ottawa colleges and concluded negotiations in the name of all college students.

The new reduction system will be put into effect immediately.

Plans of a similar nature to obtain reductions for students in theatre, clothes, food, and other purchases have been frequently discussed by the Students' Federation but never put into effect.

Western—A new examination time-table provides for three final examinations per day — from 9 a.m. to noon, 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. The Registrar has said that no student will have to write more than two exams per day, however.

This system will shorten the examination period by a week.

Manitoba—The "faltering and impoverished" Royal Winnipeg Ballet will receive approximately $400 from the University of Manitoba Glee Club.

The Glee Club executive, seeing that their show was bound to be a sell-out, presented a special matinee to aid the RWB.

On hearing of the decision, the costume company made no charge for additional use of the costumes, paid members of the cast and crew relinquished a considerable amount of their wages, and a New York company lowered royalty fees.

Carleton—At regular intervals during the next few weeks, this university will be visited by groups of students from nearby High Schools.

These students attend several lectures, visit the cafeteria and library and are taken on a tour of the campus.

Purpose of these visits is to acquaint High School students with the university community before they make up their minds definitely about attending college.

Edge Redmen 4-3 Friday Night Wallop Carabins 5-2 In Verdun

The Varsity Blues staved off a desperate McGill drive in the late stages of Friday's game in the Montreal Forum to record a slim 4-3 victory, and eliminate all possibility of anyone matching their bid for the Queen's Cup this season. Then, playing in Verdun Saturday night, they extended their unbeaten streak to fifteen games, walloping the University of Montreal Carabins 5-2, the first Varsity victory on Carabin ice in six years.

Before nearly 8,000 violently partisan fans attending the feature attraction of McGill's annual Winter Carnival, the Blues handed the Redmen a 2-1 first period lead on two deflected goals that Hugh Curry never saw. Johnny Akitt had already drawn first blood for Varsity at 14:53, but goals by Paul Dingle and Guy Bourgoin put the Tribe in front.

Ross Woods tied it up at 3:37 of the second frame, and then Clare Fisher combined with Paul Knox and Dave Jackson to give the Blues a 3-2 lead. Outshooting McGill 13-4 in this period, the Blues seemed unable to beat Bernie Wong in the Redmen net, who turned in a fine performance.

The second line again hit the score sheet early in the final stanza, as Don Cossar flipped the puck past Wong for a two-goal margin. With just six minutes left in the game Herb English put McGill back in the game, and from there to the finish it was touch and go with the Blues having trouble getting out of their own end at times.

Saturday night the Blues took to the ice against the same crew of Carabins that had held them to a 1-1 tie in their last meeting in Verdun. Norman Bradley struck for Montreal midway in the first period, and the Carabins led 1-0 going into the second although outshot 17-8.

Three quick tallies in the second frame made it look easy for the Blues, as the big first line began to show flashes of their former brilliance. Lawson scored at 5:13 to put the third line back in the picture after a six-game lapse, and then Reid and Knox scored at the half-way mark.

Reid grabbed another in the third to boost his total to twenty-four points for the season, and Ross Woods finished the Blue scoring at 10:19. In the dying minutes of the game Stephen centred John Tolton and Dave Jackson, while Bill Moreau and Lou Appleby covered the blueline, but such defensive play backfired when Giles Dupont scored for Montreal at 18:16.

Now far enough ahead to be named league titlists, the Blues have one more game, at home, against McGill March 4.

Engineering Elections Provoke Record Polling

The largest percentage of engineers ever to vote in the Engineering society elections went to the polls last Friday — 70.4% to be exact. 1250 votes were cast among the 89 nominees, also the largest number yet.

Engineering society President.

Jack Rossall, said "The results are most satisfying — a larger group turned out both for nominations and vote." He also remarked that those who had criticized the Engineering Society the most during the year, for dress etc. did not get in. Slates did not fare well in the elections — only three candidates of the nine on the most completely organized slate got in, and only one of these for a major office.

Results of the elections are:

Blood, Bones, Beasts Draw Crowd To Three-day Zoology Conversat

Blood, bones and beasts attracted large and enthusiastic crowds to the Zoology Conversat held last weekend.

For three days long lines of people, undaunted by the all-pervading smell of formaldehyde, filed past the long tables on which were arranged exhibits varying from busily chugging respirometers through the lower forms of life to human fetus. White-coated attendants and bright posters enlightened bewildered laymen as to how a headless frog could still scratch its stomach when tickled, why Junior's teeth are crooked.

Exhibits were too numerous to mention fully, but some stand out particularly: an object resembling a concrete airplane propeller, which turned out to be the vertebra of a whale; the intricate pattern of liver capillaries filled with coloured rubber before the surrounding tissue was corroded away; a snake casually entwining itself around an attendant's arm; embryos of chickens, cows and humans, all (to a layman) surprisingly well-formed; the microtom machine which sliced off incredibly thin shavings of paraffin-embedded specimens for slides.

The section relating most closely to humans was the human genetics exhibit. Here blood samples were taken, the RH factor explained and tests given for hereditary characteristics — the ability to notice a bitter taste on a bit of treated paper, or to roll up your tongue. Did you know that over 70% of North American Whites are able to curl their tongues?

The conversat is produced every four years by the members of the Biology Club and students in Biology and related courses. Live specimens such as the sleeping skunk and the malevolent owl were loaned by the Riverdale Zoo.

University Spends All Some Building Delayed

The University of Toronto spent $11,053,389 in the financial year ending June 30, 1954 and received exactly the same amount, announced Col. Eric Phillips, chairman of the Board of Governors in the annual report presented to the Ontario Legislature last Friday.

The revenue came from: general revenue, $5,775,775; special legislative grants, $4,193,000; federal grants, $1,038,539; and the previous year's surplus of $46,075.

Many projects, long in the planning stage, which should have improved the university and replaced worn out equipment had to be deferred to achieve this result, the report stated.

The figures do not include expenditures for the Ontario College of Education which is maintained under a separate vote of funds.

WUS

At the meeting of the World University Service administrative committee on Thursday, Charles Taylor was offered the position of WUS National Secretary to replace Graeme Ferguson, who retires this year.

Taylor, a graduate of McGill, is presently completing his third year as a Rhodes Scholar at Balliol College in Oxford.

Leucophlegmatics Will Turn

I have always thought that I was a reasonable man.

When I am waiting for a cup of coffee in the JCR and empty chattering females push me on the floor and trample upon me and order their coffees, I do not rise in wrath. I philosophically observe, "Puella esse trample est", and return to a quiet corner.

When I tell the latest one to my lewd friends and they turn their back upon me, I do not sulk and wait for a chance to 'get even'. I studiously laugh at all their jokes no matter how often I have heard them, in order that our comradeship will not be jeopardized by my poor taste.

When I meet a man upon the street and he asks me for a nickel, I give him a nickel. When my mother calls me to dinner, I come with alacrity.

I think that you will agree that I am a reasonable man.

Let me relate to you then, the series of incidents which have tried my patience. See if you do not think that my irritation is justified.

I have been going out with a girl — call her Susie — for some time now. She is smart girl and a pleasant girl and I like her.

Last week I saw Susie for a short time. While I was with her I smoked three cigarettes at fifteen-minute intervals.

After I had lit my second cigarette, Susie said: "You'll get cancer."

Being, as I say, a reasonable man, I replied, "Perhaps, but scientific tests have only indicated a correlation, and not necessarily a causal relationship."

"But that doesn't mean you won't get cancer," responded Susie.

Rising to the occasion, I judiciously came up with: "The fact that I may get cancer doesn't mean that I wouldn't have got cancer if I had got cancer even if I did smoke."

Susie, however, was more than a match for this: "Just because you didn't get cancer wouldn't mean that you couldn't have got cancer and if you had got cancer it wouldn't mean that you couldn't have got cancer even if you didn't smoke. In fact, just the opposite."

"Yes, dear," I replied, dismayed as I delicately ground the two-inch butt into the rug.

The third cigarette I smoked in gloomy self-consciousness, as Susie glared at me.

That night I stayed up until two o'clock working on some calculus problems. I arose at seven as usual, and as a result I was somewhat fatigued.

It so happened that I met Susie that afternoon after a hard day of five lectures.

Susie looked at me and said: "You look tired; I don't think you're getting enough sleep at night. How much sleep did you have last night?"

"Five hours," I foolishly said.

"Don't you know that you should have at least eight hours a night?", yelled Susie. "Now after this I want you to make a point of going to bed at 11:30 every night. You'll be leucophlegmatic before you know it. And smoking doesn't help either. You shall stop right away." "Yes, dear," I said, and went wearily upon my way. I had to think out this disturbing state of affairs in some quiet sanctuary.

I have thought it out now. Clearly I am being persecuted. Should I revolt openly, or chastise Susie for drinking too much milk?

I appeal to you, my friend. Leave your suggestion in the Hart House chapel. I've been spending much time there since I gave up smoking.

Education Minister Warm To Scholarship Campaign

The case for increased scholarship aid to university students will be presented to Premier Frost next Tuesday by a delegation of students from four Ontario universities.

The Toronto members of the delegation, Bill Angus, Norm Chalmers, Gord Hurlburt and Peter Martin, had a preparatory interview last Friday with Dr. Dunlop, the Ontario Minister of Education. Norm Chalmers, president of the national scholarship campaign said "We are very happy about it. Although they were not wholly sympathetic and could not make any commitments, they understood our case and paid attention to us".

Girl Wanted: Personality, Vim and Looks

Trials for the 1955-56 Drum Majorette position will be held at the Students' Administrative Council Office at 5.00 p.m. on Monday afternoon. This is the first time since 1952 that there has been a vacancy for the Drum Majorette position which has been filled by Shirley Eckel in the past year. Previous to this the position has been held by Helen Mackie and Hilka Filipula.

The position of Drum Majorette is a very exacting one requiring a girl of good looks but with stamina and personality. She must be prepared to give up a lot of her time, training with the Band during the week and also be prepared to give up a week-end travelling to out-of-town football games.

It is not essential that applicants on Monday afternoon be expert in twirling batons as much as this can be learned from Shirley Eckel before the end of this year, but it would require a great deal of practice during the summer months.

The position of Drum Majorette for the University of Toronto is probably the most outstanding position on the campus and the Majorette can do much to add to Toronto's reputation wherever she goes.

Applications will be screened by Shirley Eckel and Bill Harris, chairman of the Blue and White, in the Committee Room of the S.A.C. office, and they are hoping to find an outstanding candidate for the position next year of Drum Majorette for the University of Toronto.

The delegation presented its two requests: that the average value of bursaries now in effect be increased from $250 to $500, and that the total number of bursaries be doubled. Chalmers felt that the minister was particularly sympathetic to the first part of the program, in view of the greater need at present because of the unemployment and difficulty of finding summer jobs. He also felt that Dr. Dunlop was impressed with the reasonableness of the demands.

The Tuesday delegation will include as well as the Toronto students the presidents of the students' councils of Western and McMaster and a representative from Queen's, possibly also one from Waterloo. This interview will be much more important as it involves expenditure and change of government policy. The delegates expect heavier criticism, as they will have to convince people not primarily concerned with education, who must balance the student case with many others.

The representatives will present their demands to the premier. At present two thousand students are receiving an average of $250, from all sources. They hope to make this four thousand receiving $500 each, which would involve an outlay of some 1½ million dollars.

This is Ontario's part in the national scholarship campaign. It is necessary to respect provincial rights by making direct requests for aid to the provincial governments, but should provinces implement the student requests the natural result would be the provinces going to Ottawa for money.

Deep Appreciation Expressed By Vice Chancellor of Patna

(The following letter was received from Dr. B. Narayana, Vice-chancellor of Patna University.)

Down The Drain

(Reprinted from The Prod, an unofficial publication of the Meds-men.)

Recently the question of raising the fee that we the students pay to NFCUS, from 20 cents to 50 cents each, came up. The executive in its wisdom decided to support this fee raise.

We fully realize the unimportance of NFCUS to the students in Medicine and greatly appreciate the thoughtful manner in which our representatives refrain from bothering us for opinions on the subject. We wonder however, if NFCUS could collect $400 from the student in Medicine on a voluntary basis.

sity and addressed to the Chairman, WUS of Canada:)

Dear Sir,

I have learned with great pleasure from Mr. Virendra Agarwal that the Canadian World University Service is very much interested in the Students' Health Centre to be constructed at Patna and is actually engaged in raising funds for this purpose. We have been greatly impressed by this expression of your generosity and kindness and I want to convey, on behalf of the WUS, Patna, our heart-felt appreciation of what you are doing to help us. The Health Centre at Patna, when it is completed, will serve one of the most pressing needs in the University.

Part of the cost will be met locally by contribution from Government and by students. The students will contribute to a portion of the recurring expenditure and the University and the local Government will be approached to contribute to the balance.

There is no doubt that by means of projects such as this which the W.U.S. is anxious to promote in different countries, the youth of the world are being drawn closer to one another and yet another impetus is being given to international brotherhood and mutual cooperation.

Let me thank you once again for your kind interest in our Health Centre project.

With all good wishes,
Yours sincerely,
(Signed:) B. NARAYANA

Brother Hoods

For six days this week, we are asked to reflect upon the essential brotherhood of mankind. With the benign patronage of the Prime Minister of Canada, the simpering goodwill of businessmen, the searing intensity of professional proponents of religion, and the gutless acquiescence of fifteen million Canadians; the cause of brotherhood, "unity without uniformity," love thy neighbour as thyself, contribution-to-world-peace-and-understandingism, is being advanced to the very parapets of men's minds.

We should like to think that it might go beyond, — into the innermost reaches of his mind, and beyond, — into the depths of his feelings. The prospect of so many tired and jaded people, mouthing so many tired and jaded platitudes, fills the horizons of our minds with sombrest grays.

It is true that on our shiny veneer covered with scaling sap of the sumach, we wear with arrogance the badge of devotion to this cause. With flaring nostrils, we flaunt the tawdry tinsel of our ideals, even in the face of glaring facts.

For the facts are that we are each convinced of our own superiority, our own divine right to monopolize the ears and right hand of the deity. Even the masochists in our society are such infinitely superb masochists that they could win any international contest with scarcely a twitch of their tortured souls.

Austerly speaks the voice of Science, strange god of a godless tribe, a philistine usurper among the chosen people, called and elected to the worship of Ego. His cold, graceless dicta fall upon hardened cochlea as his voice reverberates throughout the land.

"There are no scientifically demonstrable criteria with which to catalogue the superiority of races".

Blandly flows the voice of Politics, soothing with mellifluous tones the ruffled feelings of an injured segment of our country, disguising the bastardy of its unholy wedlock.

"Only as Canada learns the secrets of tolerance and good will within its own borders and extends this spirit to other nations can we hope to find that true brotherhood that is the ideal of national Brotherhood Week."

Unctuously breathes the voice of Religion, summing from their graves the shadows of voiceless ideals, murdered in the pursuit of uncelestial ends. Here the fine edge of compromise mars the clarity of the ringing coin.

"But it should be evident that the more we are, and have and achieve in common, the greater the impulse toward the achieving of the high destiny of children of the One God."

After the noise of battle, the forces of social right may rest from their struggle to supersede each other as guardians of the public soul.

Into that quiet the still, small voice of truth may intrude one query.

"How can you love one another while building bombs; or practice tolerance with those who are rich and well fed, while you are poor and ill and starved; or have and achieve in common towards that high destiny, while vested interests turn the key and lock you in the cabin of their financial empire?"

The Editor,
The Varsity.

After sitting through an hour of campaign speeches on the eve of Engineers' Election Day, I was left with the feeling that if this is the best that we engineers can do, it leaves much to be desired in the way of good student electioneering.

My reasons for this feeling are many, but I set down only a few. First, the Faculty and the existing society co-operated, by having all lectures cancelled for an hour to allow all candidates time to address the student body. What happened? Of approximately 1,800 engineers, perhaps a hundred at the most were present — many of these being candidates or banner-bearers etc. The rest of the 1,800? I make no accusations or excuses, but the fact is they were not where the faculty or society had hoped and intended they would be. In such an election in which there are approximately 40 positions to be filled, how can anyone even attempt an honest vote if he hasn't at least seen the candidates? Does he, after having voted for all his friends, just base his voting on the spelling of the names, or perhaps, the idea is to put the candidates' names in alphabetical order? The decision is hard enough, but without at least seeing and hearing the candidates, it would be impossible!

Secondly, I would question the quality of the speeches themselves. If anyone were to try to summarize the general trend of topics, he would undoubtedly find no better caption than "Wine, Wimmin, and Sax" as one of the candidates so neatly termed it. Being now in danger of making enemies with all the candidates for life, I should at once clarify this sweeping statement. This does not apply to all the candidates, by any means, and while sitting, listening to them talk, I decided the speakers could be divided roughly into two groups.

There were those who had the sincerity and straightforwardness to get up and say what they meant. If they wanted the job, they said so and why, and tried to outline what they would do if given the chance.

The second group, and by far the largest, was comprised of those who spoke not of what they thought, but of what they thought the audience would like them to be thinking. This, in my estimation, is where the great tragedy lies. All of these candidates felt obliged to tell "dirty jokes" or use crude references of one sort or another to interest the audience. It was quite obvious to anyone that this was not the way these fellows usually spoke or acted, but each seemed to think that the only way to get through to engineers was by way of the gutter. I maintain that to any self-respecting engineer, this should be the worst of insults. Where did this outlook arise? I do not know, but every engineering student seems to accept it without asking why. I daresay that I have heard as many "spicy stories" as the next fellow, but I do feel that an election campaign is neither the time nor the place for them.

There has been a lot of talk this year about "cleaning up" the Engineering Society. This is supposedly done by changing "Skule" to "School" and by removing engineers' jackets and caps from the campus, but, hang it all, folks — what's wrong with "Skule" or engineers' jackets any more than with Pharmacy or Victoria jackets? I suggest that to "clean up" engineering, if that be so desired, the place to start is at the elections.

I am willing to wager that there is not one Engineering student who is proud of his faculty when stories come out in the papers about wild and childish rampages on and around the campus. Why do these things happen? I suggest that it all stems from this misconception of how an engineer must act. It seems that while a student, an engineer should be a hell-raiser from the south of the campus, but after graduation, he immediately becomes a professional man and a respected citizen. Is this not rather impossible?

I do not suggest we all become angels overnight, but I do feel that the time has come to try and at least get the thin edge of the wedge between the modern engineering student and a set of outmoded ideals.

To all those engineers who are completely disgusted with me and, at this point have just scoffed their loudest "scoff". I would ask them to sit alone for a few minutes away from any other "scoffers" and decide in their own minds just what engineering means to them. If it is something to be achieved only by way of the gutter, then Heaven help us all!

Voice in Wilderness?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

A lot can be said for an editor who has the insight and fortitude to make the bald statements that appeared in the last issue, and while many of his comments reeked of the "voice in the wilderness" bit, undoubtedly he was only attempting to quench the common thirst for startlingness.

The all-too-numerous reports from the American "Defence" Department are certainly ominous enough, and assuredly the all-consuming dash for the chopping block does leave one weak, but one would hope that to every problem of this sort there will be a solution. The truly correct one, I could never have the ingenuity to suggest, but I can muster sufficient vehemence to condemn the alternative put forward on those hapless sheets.

What does he propose? — prayer for mercy. Well, I wish him luck. I don't think, however, that he will be any more successful than any of the other defeatists of the past, who, after poking holes in the faults of their countrymen, are content to shoulder the blame and calmly await their doom.

Attitudes such as these are not to be tolerated. The fact that we have gone about our business a little shoddily, has become painfully evident to anyone who has ever thought about it; but this only cries out for swift and inspired action and the abomination of despair and supplication. The question of method, right or wrong, is no longer the issue; we are in a battle for survival.

And survive we will, albeit the barbarian is overrunning us, and the ranks of our turncoats keep apace with those of our casualties. Huge weapons of war are being forged, and mankind is relatively defenceless in the face of them. If the bombs do come, then the cream of the earth shall perish. But man himself will never perish; somewhere in the nooks and crannies of the globe he will grow again and multiply.

But what of the more comfortable alternative? A pitched battle, without the bomb, would probably come up with a workable solution at least, however few there be to enjoy it. Communism and Democracy would undoubtedly be welded together to form a more natural framework from which the modern man could mould his life.

It does look as though we are in for a reckoning; we are behind in our dues, as it were. But there is absolutely no reason why we shouldn't come up with a less slovenly answer than prayer.

THIS EARTH IS OURS

Francis Goodman (standing) and Sandra Collis in a scene from "This Earth Is Ours" by William Kosenko which was entered by UC Players' Guild in the Inter-Varsity Drama Festival and which will play here on Wednesday, Feb. 23.

Ottawa, Ont. (Special to The Varsity) — University College's "This Earth Is Ours" walked off with everything but the theatre at the Inter-Varsity Drama Festival here last Saturday night. The Players' Guild production, which represented University of Toronto at the nine-production competition, captured the London Free Press trophy for the best play and the Best Male Actor's award went to Stan Daniels. The Best Actress award went to Sandra Collis.

As director Curt Reis stood on the stage after receiving the trophy, he watched in silence as Sandra, who played Anna and Stan, who played her husband, Joe Stopa, mounted the stairs to the call of adjudicator Julia Murphy.

Mrs. Murphy, who is a prominent Ottawa actress, called the play a "Really imaginative production of a realistic drama."

After their Saturday afternoon performance of the difficult story of a farmer's family being exploited by a utilities company which results in violence, the cast gathered in the Little Theatre in Ottawa for the adjudication.

By Aubrey Golden

Seasoned Festival-goers called it the "Highest praise they ever heard"

In her afternoon adjudication, Mrs. Murphy said, "This director never did anything without a reason." She commented that she was particularly happy about the staging and "Quite pleased" with the mood music, composed by Milton Barnes for the play.

This "Rave" gave the first hint of the triumph which was to come for the University College Group. No one expected, however, that it would clean up every award for which it was eligible.

McMaster received the only other award, the Jackson Trophy for the best Canadian play. Robertson Davies' Eros At Breakfast.

She praised the "Imaginative" lighting, called the acting of "A generally high level", and cited each of the actors individually for their performances.

Of Stan Daniels as Joe and Sandra Collis as Anna, she merely said, "I really take my hat off to these two".

Syd Moscoe as Lang was "Successfully trying for something quite tough." "He showed good characterization which I would have liked to see go further," she said.

Morris Fine as Finger and Norman Austin as Father Michael were, she thought, very interesting and expressive.

Wells, Arthur Low, was "Very interesting".

"I admire the courage with which he tackled the sobbing scene." The role of Duffy, played by Joel Wagman, was "Tough". "But he showed a great deal of variation."

Burns, played also by Morris Fine was "Very nice". She advised Frances Goodman, who played Mary to develop more mood, but thought that she contributed favourably to the play. Mike Nimchuck, as Gruber, "Was sincere and showed nice variation."

The play will be presented in Toronto Wednesday, Feb. 23, announced director Curt Reis.

As she presented the trophy, Mrs. Murphy said; "This is for a high standard of production, directing-wise, acting-wise and stage-wise."

ART

In the Hart House Gallery the camera show is still on display. The Print Room contains silk screen prints by British Columbia Artists.

The much-publicized Dutch Painters show opened Friday night in the Toronto Art Gallery. Apparently it was a mink affair. It will stay there until March 25th.

The Royal Ontario Museum is holding the 39th Annual Exhibition for the Society of Canadian Painter-Etchers and Engravers in its Print Room from March 5th to 31st. Etchings, dry points, aquatints, lithographs, serigraphs, wood engravings and cuts and linoleum cuts will all be exhibited.

MUSIC

The Opera Festival opens this week with clangen and bängen at the Royal Alexandra. Tickets still available.

A much quieter event will take place next Sunday evening when the Hart House Orchestra Associates hold their spring concert at 8:30 p.m. in Hart House. But its importance is not in proportion to its noise. Memberships still available at the Royal Conservatory, in Hart House, at the SCA office and at the Bursar's Office-in Trinity.

A week Sunday the Hart House Glee Club will present its annual concert as the last in the Sunday nine o'clock series.

DRAMA

An event weird and wonderful will take place Tuesday at 5 o'clock in St. Hilda's College — the staff of Trinity College and the Dean of women will appear in an original one-act play written by Professor Ashley.

King Lear opens in Hart House this Saturday. I don't need to mention that a visit to this production would be a relatively painless if not positively enjoyable method of getting part of some course covered.

The Crest will continue with Marching Song all this week. Its reviews have good all round. See The Varsity "most important play of the twentieth century".

The Board of Syndics of Hart House Theatre has announced that the Ernest Dale Memorial Award will be presented in Hart House Theatre at the annual tea for all students who have participated in Hart House productions under Bob Gill. The award is presented to the graduating student who has made the most significant contribution to the work of the theatre during the year.

EXPLORING MINDS

The School of Social Work finished its trilogy on the same high level of interest that it began in the program The Man who didn't need help for the Exploring Minds series. Again the script was written from the point of view of one student facing problems and growing to a more searching attitude towards other people and him or herself. It explored the difficulties involved in adjusting to blindness and the means available through the CNIB of helping one's self to a seeing touch. The unity of treatment and theme in stressing certain aspects of social work was maintained.

The acting of the girl student, and her advisor Miss Jean Gibson of the CNIB was much better delivered than the acting of last week's people. This was partly due to the fact that the script by George Salverson was written with greater intelligence and naturalness as a play-form. Taken together these three programs form a very creditable trilogy.

Gill Puts King Lear On...

"It's been a wonderful discovery for me just how playable King Lear is", says Bob Gill of his annual Shakespearean production in Hart House. "It's a play meant to be performed, to move as well as to entertain in addition to all the possible philosophical discussion about its meaning."

Many critics have said that the play was unplayable, but as Granville Barker points out in his great essay, the only plays that were not good theatre were the rearranged 19th century productions complete with happy ending and a love affair between Cordelia and Edgar.

As well as directing the play, Mr. Gill has designed a set made of platforms for it. In describing his method for arriving at the form of the set he said that he started first with his conception of the play and then considered its needs. In the case of King Lear one of the first needs was for two levels of movement. At one point in the action Gloucester jumps over a cliff. In some productions the cliff has been merely a six-inch box from which to make the great leap. Then there is a need for two stairways from one level to another, and several places of entry and departure to the set so that the action can be fluid and easy-moving.

Gill's production is directed to concentrate entirely on the characters and the movement between them. "Lear should not have any distraction in the way of realistic scenery or props", says Gill. The people will play in the brilliant colours of the costumes designed for this production by Marion Walker, against a completely black background, foreground and underground. "I have tried to combine simplicity of design with richness of colour by using heavy earthy materials", Miss Walker said.

Milton Barnes, who wrote the music for the UC Players' Guild production of Miss Julie has been commissioned to write music for King Lear. It will be scored for three instruments to play backstage.

The cast of twenty speaking parts is mostly made up of actors with previous experience on the campus. John Saxton, who plays King Lear, received considerable favour for his Proctor in the Trinity presentation of the Crucible. John Douglas, the Cornwall of the Hart House productions, has appeared in four other Shakespeare roles on the campus, one of them being Shylock. Rex Southgate as Gloucester appeared this year as King Magnus. Anthony Grey as Edgar appeared in the Crucible and in the summer production of the Earle Grey players, Jane Griffin, the Cordelia, played in Vic's Noah and Judy Teague as Regan was Trinity's respectable prostitute.

Madden Best On Floor With 20 As Cagers Fight To Stay Alive

By JOHN WILSON

Now that the Intercollegiate basketball season has passed the half-way mark, and since the Blues kept themselves in the race by dumping Assumption Saturday night, we have returned to our favorite pastime of forecasting the final league standings. Our statistically-minded sports staff have come up with a very logical set of results, and - you guessed it - there's a three-way tie for first place between Varsity, Western, and Queen's. This is all the more unfortunate as there will be no post-season action to decide the title, and the three universities will share the Wilson Cup until next winter.

The outfit that is going to cause this mix-up is the same one that did it last fall, the Queen's Golden Gaels. They have already made it possible for the Blues to stay in the running by defeating Western Friday night, and in order to keep themselves in the picture, they are more than likely to trip the Blues this Saturday in Kingston. That will leave them with a 7-3 record, and since the Blues will probably win all the rest of their games, they too will finish with 7-3.

The Western Mustangs are presently high atop the league with five wins and one loss in six games, but they stand to lose to the Blues here next week, and also to Assumption in Windsor. Assumption have a strong club, but they suffer through the same mistake the Blues made last year, losing two on the road to McGill and Queen's. The power of the Mustangs on their home court has yet to be seriously challenged this season, but the Raiders have at least three men that are hard to stop, George Joseph, Hugh Coyle, and Dick Mackenzie. Joseph was the best all-round performer for the Raiders Saturday night in Hart House, coolly controlling their attack on the Blues, and hooping seven in the dying minutes as the Raiders attempted to slice the Varsity margin. That trio are likely to give the Mustangs trouble in Windsor, and thus Western will also finish with a 7-3 record.

Assumption will win two more and lose to Western in London to end up just out of the money with 6-4. McGill will take fifth place honors, winning only one more, that from McMaster in Hamilton. The Marauders are destined to stay in the cellar without a victory, although they might grab one when McGill visits in two weeks, but that won't affect their final position.

The Blues, of course, could make it just a two-way dead-lock with Western by beating Queen's on Saturday, but this will be a tall order without a versatile centre to check Paul Fedor into the floor. In fact they could win the title by doing this, if Western does split with the Purple Raiders in their home-and-home series at the end of the schedule. But that's a little bit hard to believe, although admittedly pleasant as it would mean all three major Intercollegiate championships for the University of Toronto this year, a record to be proud of. But we like that first arrangement, ungainly as it may be, with Varsity, Western, and the Gaels sharing the silverware. At least we get a third of the title, which does not make the overall picture of Intercollegiate activity this year much less attractive.

From the Blue Room . . . Congratulations are in order for the hockey Blues who have honored the University by getting so far ahead in the Intercollegiate race that nobody can catch them. That means the Queen's Cup, and another piece of silver was added Friday night when they won the Birks Trophy as the best team at McGill's Winter Carnival . . . J. P. Metras sat in on the Assumption-Varsity game Saturday, and regaled us with excuses for the Mustangs' loss to Queen's. "Those boys are all heart", said the Western coach, and we have to agree. It's competition like that that keeps college athletics from really getting professional.

Blue Swimmers Edge Rochester

The Varsity Senior swimming team won a close 42½ - 42 decision over Rochester at an exhibition meet held at the Hart House Pool Saturday night. The Varsity team trailed throughout the meet and were trailing 42 - 35 with but the 400 yd. relay to be run. Varsity won the event and were awarded seven points for winning. There is a ruling stating that if two teams are tied at the end of a meet, then the team winning the last event picks up a bonus ½ point; thus Varsity won the senior event. The Intermediates however, were not so fortunate as they lost to Humber-side Collegiate 42 - 31.

Results:

Reversing the usual technical procedure, the Varsity Blues first pressed, and then cleaned the Assumption College Purple Raiders, 81-73, in the torrid basketball feature of Saturday's Hart House Athletic night.

An overpowering three-man press by the Blues smothered the Raiders' fast-breaking attack and enabled them to overcome a 45-35 half-time deficit, shooting into the lead around the thirteen minute mark of the second half.

Varsity won without star centre, George Stulac, who has reportedly quit the team. Coach Bob Masterson said before game time that Stulac had not reported to practice all last week, but could suggest no reason for his disappearance.

The outstanding athlete's brother, Joe Stulac, who was present at Saturday's game, would make no further comment on the situation than to say, "As far as I know, right now George is at the Y.M.C.A. practising basketball."

Saturday's victory left Varsity still very definitely in the Intercollegiate championship race. The Blues are now tied with Assumption for third place, but hold a game in hand over the Raiders in the important loss column. Should they win their next two league games, with McGill next Friday and Queen's on Saturday, both out of town, Varsity would set the stage for what might well be a championship showdown with Western in their next Hart House engagement, Wednesday, March 2.

The pressing defense was adopted by Toronto early in the game, but didn't become fully effective until the second half when Assumption, which had played in Hamilton the night before, began to tire. Then, smothering the Raiders' long-passing game, the Blues began to capitalize on the opposition's back-court miscues to shrink their deficit, and finally to lead.

Another large factor in the winning rally was the improved

Blue shooting in the second stanza. While in the first half their average was generally poor - save for Don Fawcett, who sank all of his fourteen points in that frame - in the second they developed "hot hands", and seemed incapable of missing.

Leo Madden and Vic Kurdyak were especially hot during the rally, Madden hooping fourteen of his game high of twenty, and Kurdyak ten of his total of eleven, in that period.

The game was rough all the way, with sixty-five personals being called in all, thirty-six to Assumption. Six of the ten starters, including four of the Raiders' quintet, had fouled out well before the end.

One of the retiring Raiders, Dick MacKenzie, became so incensed at the calls of referees Barry Lowes and Jack Gurney, that he threatened to return to the floor, with violence in mind. He was restrained by Assumption coach, "Red" Nantais, and several other occupants of the visitors' bench.

Nantais had a post-game discussion with the refs, but for the press he had "No comment".

Leo Madden, after shaking some first-half shooting and passing bugs, was probably the best man on the floor. As well as his game-high scoring effort, he sparked the high pressure Blue defense, intercepting several Raider passes, and checking effectively throughout. In the late stages, with the Blues protecting their lead, his fine dribbling drew fatal fouls from the desperate Purple.

Don Fawcett, whose scoring kept the home side within range in the first half, was sensational on the backboards, both offensively and defensively. His rebounding, with that of Al Vaichulis and Art Binnington, made Stulac's absence less noticeable. Binnington was especially effective during the Blues' winning rally, setting up several fast breaks from the defensive boards. Vaichulis played a strong game, hooping fourteen before fouling out with six and a half minutes remaining.

For Assumption, MacKenzie was high man, with fifteen, fourteen in the first half. His effectiveness was hampered in the second half, as his rising foul count forced Nantais to use him sparingly. Hugh Coyle, sparking the Raiders both ways, hooped fourteen. Matt Borowiec was probably their best back-board man, but he too was forced to play cautiously with his foul total mounting. Lou Verres sank eleven for the Purple before fouling out at the 11.30 mark of the second, the earliest man to leave.

Saints Seconds Tie Physeders

In the usual humorous way of female hockey, St. Hilda's tied PHE 11, 2-2, on Friday afternoon up at Varsity Arena. The Saints, unbeaten so far this year, seemed sure bets for the first place standing in league III; however, if the type of play displayed on Friday is any indication of future games, the Blue and Grey team might find themselves nearer the bottom than the top.

Nancy Banks, the St. Hilda's goalie was hardly settled in the nets when Ann Stevenson popped one in behind the crease, to make the score 1-0 for the PHE gals. The Saints, completely rattled by this show of power by the team which they had beaten in an earlier contest 7-0, seemed unable to gather forces throughout the rest of the first period.

In the second period, revitalized by a two second intermission, the Saints fought back until they scored, on a goal by Tibu Eaton. Not to be outdone in scoring by the Saints, PHE added to their total in a quick break away by Helen Hickling, and thus the period ended with Miss Slack's girls again ahead 2-1.

The Saints, although hard hit by injuries and the depletion of their stars to the Senior Saints, fought determinedly back, and were rewarded for their efforts by another goal late in the third period. Mary Lynne Boyce was responsible for the equalizer.

By FLO MIDDLETON

Next week-end is the last chance the fair maidens of this establishment will have an opportunity to bring home an intercollegiate title to add to the small collection of loot we have gathered in this year. The prize takes the form of a statue more endearingly called the "bronze baby" by the b-ball lovers of Toronto.

Although this bronze effigy of a small athletic maiden has been housed in Falconer Hall for the last few years, six to be exact, it still remains a question whether we can bring the little girl back to Toronto for the 1955 season.

In spite of the fact that the Varsity six have shown to be a well co-ordinated team, in the games played so far this year, this is hardly any indication that they will sweep away all opposition up in London come this week-end.

If the game played last Monday against Hamilton Teachers' College when Toronto eked out a one point win, is a sign of things to come let's switch universities quick. Western completely smeared this same Normal School a few weeks before. In spite of the signs, Toronto looks good and if she does not come home with the bacon, at least the girls will have given an excellent try. I'll still put my money on T.O.

The game last Monday was just the medicine the doctor ordered because it removed the old sickness of overconfidence. The girls now are fully aware of what they are up against in the forthcoming tournament and will give it the old college try.

Granted, we have a monopoly on the b-ball title, but it is just the kind of monopoly we don't mind hanging on to - just as long as the competition does not mind.

Dacyshyn Tops Seconds

It was John Dacyshyn and the Varsity Baby Blues all the way as they drubbed the Hustlers Bible Class, 66-46, in the preliminary game of Saturday's Athletic night basketball double header.

The Intermediates were never in any danger in posting their first win in their last three games. They led by twenty-five, 39-14, at the half, and coasted to victory.

The big story of the game was the sensational scoring of Dacyshyn, whose game high of thirty points set the season mark for all Toronto players on the home floor.

In garnering the record, "Jumpin' John" was hot from everywhere on the court but the foul line, where he might have been pressing. His main weapon was his speed, as he broke fast for several scintillating scores, though his shooting from outside and from the corners was very strong.

He also starred defensively, doing most of the Baby Blues' defensive rebounding and playing a powerful checking game in the Blue zone.

Other standouts for the Intermediates, were Frankie Palermo, who sank ten, mainly on a fine set, Ed Rigby, with eight points and a fine defensive effort, and Hal Rotman, with five.

For the Hustlers, tall Harry Wilson was high man, hooping thirteen. He was also their most prominent rebound man. Jack Gray and player-manager-coach, George Cass each dumped eleven, while Shields, with a fine left-handed push, sank eight.

A humorous note was struck in the second half when "Big Ed" Rigby flattened 175-lb. George Cass with a solid body-slam. "Big Ed" weighs all of one-thirty.

Blue Tracksters Swamp Buffalo

The University of Toronto track team put on an impressive display of strength Saturday, by swamping a combined team of Buffalo State and Buffalo YMCA. Varsity came through with wins in 3 of the 5 events and tied for first in the other two.

Dick Harding continued his winning streak by capturing first place in the 300 yds. and tying for first in both the 100 and 50 yard events.

Arn Deacon of Toronto was in on the three way tied for first in the 50 yds. along with Harding and Buckner from Buffalo State.

Bill Eckersley won the 600 yd. event for the second week in a row, but was beaten by teammate Peter Watson in the 1000 yds, where he placed second.

Norm Williams, Varsity's hurdling star, was again forced to compete in the open class, due to a shortage of hurdlers on the Buffalo team. However, although his points did not contribute to the Toronto victory, Norm managed to lower his track record of 6.3 seconds for the 50 yd. high hurdles to 6.2 seconds. The world's record for this event is 6.0 seconds.

Other members of the Toronto team who placed in events were, Ross Linton, who was second in the 300 yds.; Doug McEnter, who was second in the 600 yds., and Jim Basingwaite, who was third in the 600 yds.

Wrestling Final Held Saturday

The Senior Intramural Wrestling Championship Finals were held at Hart House Saturday night. H. Robinson, Wychffe, won the heavy division crown by defeating M. Vasko, St. Mike's. J. Wesley, MED, defeated D. Elliot, SPS, in the 191 lb. division. W. Kami-Takahara took the 130 lb. crown as there was no opposition for him. P. Hickey, SPS, defeated T. McKeown, SMC, in the 157 lb. division. F. Wood, Vic, defeated F. Roth, Dents, in the 123 lb. division.

In the 167 lb. division, B. Hooyers, SPS, advanced into the final round after defeating D. Yundt SPS, in the semi-finals. L. Stone, U.C., defeated V. Varnos, SPS, to reach the finals. In the final, Hooyers won to take the crown.

In the 147 lb. division semi-finals, G. Stephenson defeated T. Gothard, SMC, while C. Mayer, SPS, defeated J. W. Proctor. In the finals, G. Stephenson won the championship.

E. Yanchla, SPS, won the right to meet Dart, SPS, in the finals as he defeated J. T. Bernardi in the semis. Dart, however, won the championship.

SMC Are Bloodiest
Cop Corpuscle Cup

St. Michael's College won the Corpuscle Cup this year, announced Barb Flint Blood Campaign Chairman last night. The competition this year was based on the percent above the accepted quota of blood donations that the college faculty donated. St. Mike's agreed to give sixty pints and actually donated 91, for an increase of 51.6%.

The University of Toronto is becoming braver, it seems. This year's donations totalled 1412, against 1411 last year. Following are the results of the campaign by faculties:

Faculty	Quota	Donations	% Difference
Engineering	300	276	-8 %

The Trophy will be donated to St. Mike's at the next Athletic Night, said Barbara Flint.

Encyclopaedia Offers Chance
For Summer Job

Energetic students of the University of Toronto, both male and female, have been offered an opportunity to earn up to $75-$125 a week in summer work.

They can do this by showing interested parents the two Encyclopaedia Britannica educational programs, arranged to meet the growing need for educational opportunities in the home at a time when school classrooms are too overcrowded for the teachers to spend enough individual time on each student.

"Earnings will generally reflect the chosen representative's own energy, and the number of prospects to whom the program is shown," said Mr. Markus, District manager of the Britannica Offices here. "However, undergraduates who participated in the summer-work program in past years, when the need for Britannica products was not even so urgent as it is today have consistently earned $75 a week, and payments of $125 a week to temporary representatives are not uncommon".

SHARE Banquet

The campus is responding slowly but steadily to the SHARE campaign, announced Barry Cooke last night. In the first week only about $600 of the total student objective of $6000 has been collected.

"Trinity and St. Hilda's, along with Victoria and Nursing all are between fifteen and twenty per cent of their objectives," said Cooke. "Much of the early success has been attributed to the hard working speech-maker, Lewis Perinbam," continued Cooke. "The staff of the university have been especially generous in their contributions."

The SHARE banquet will be held tonight at Hart House. His Excellency, Dr. M. A. Rauf, High Commissioner from India, will speak on the conditions at Patna, and the need for aid there. There are still tickets left, and may be purchased at the SAC office for $125.

J. McNutty Takes Charge of Bitney Fargassin Moves Into Heart House

In an unprecedented move, the President of the University, Piddle Smith, announced the appointment of Josephine McNutty as Dean of Women of University College.

Simultaneously, he also announced the appointment of Mario Fargassin as Warden of Heart House.

The announcement which has been expected by well-informed university officials for quite some time came to the student body as a shock.

Dean McNutty in commenting on his new appointment said "I have dealt with the male half of the university population for quite some time now and I am sick of it." When asked if he did not think it strange to become Dean of Women, he said "No because we must not let superficial differences disconcert us."

Warden Fargassin, who had been Dean of Women felt the same. Dean Bossell in commenting on the two new appointments felt that all parties concerned would derive substantial benefits from the changes. He praised Warden Fargassin and Dean McNutty as two educators magnificently suited for the difficult task lying ahead of them.

Dean Bossie MacFarson of Victory College said "Ha, from now on there won't be any curfew in Bitney Hall. In recent years there has been considerable disagreement between the two Deans of Women about curfews. There was no curfew in Victory Girls' Residence, whereas Bitney Hall was more protective of the morality of its inhabitants.

"Men of the university should realize that in all probability the Arbor Room will be subject to curfew."

Chaplain to Whitney Hall, John D. Rover, said: "This could not have happened at Harvard. How typically Canadian," he added.

On previous occasions males have gained admission to Bitney Hall by means of ladders. This is believed to be the first time that a male has taken up residence in this pasture of virginity. Residents of Anstie Hall said they would welcome a similar change. Loretto College refused to comment.

OUR CRIME CORRESPONDENT has just informed us of a number of shocking incidents which have been taking place within the boundaries of this university during the past several months. The drinking of vast quantities of liquor; the near-naked condition of a number of young ladies of the university; and the maintenance of a nefarious "pleasure lair" deep within the heart of this institution were among the shocking revelations.

Our correspondent says that the President of the university, Mr. Pidley Smith, was highly alarmed when informed of such infamous carryings-on, and that he promises to spare no means in apprehending and exerting a most strenuous discipline upon the culprits. "Every letter of the Caput would be brought to bear," he proclaimed. His terrible proscription should bring terror and jittering to the knees of the guilty!

Our correspondent writes as follows:

I regret to inform you, my editors, of a most regrettable scandal, the details of which I should much rather spare you for they are indeed, past putting on paper. They involve a degree of debauchery and sensuous exhibitionism scarcely to be desired in one's wildest dreams (I was remarking upon this very point to the President!)

Needless to say, however, I was horrified to learn that my pennies (and I might add, gentlemen, yours) were assisting in the maintenance of this most disgraceful club. For that, gentlemen, is precisely what it is — a club, I might even say a — dare I say it? — a sex club! To think that I, that you, — that we all — have been indirectly attaching our approbation to such an enterprise in so tangible a manner as that of dollars and cents is insupportable! While we would not for a moment wish to identify ourselves with such a nefarious group — indeed, never! — it does seem to me rather shabby that some people should skim off all the cream.

The intelligence of what has been going on was given me by a Mr. William Bangus who admitted under my persistent questioning that he knew of an "associate" within the ranks.

It is incumbent upon me to state that the bosom of my associate was fully as ample as would be displaced by two large grapefruits; she smoked a cigarette from a holder in a most elegant fashion indeed and if my memory does not serve me wrong, I believe it was not long ago that she gained prominence in the columns of the press by applying to race off into the desert with some Sheikh or other.

She revealed to me that Mr. Bangus was a good deal more knowledgeable of the affairs of the club than he had expressed himself to me. But imagine my surprise, my sense of horror and disdain, gentlemen, when she let it be known that the President, himself, Mr. Pidley Smith, was also cognizant of its existence. Of course I had not the heart to mention this to his face; and indeed he promised that no stone would be left unturned in seeking those at fault for so blameful a spending of public funds. But imagine!

I should like to spare my readers the ghastly details but it becomes my duty as a journalist to reveal all. Through the influences of my friend — must I say friend merely — I was enabled to make an impromptu visit to this suite of sin: I beheld a most rapturous spectacle, a most intoxicating scene in this black dungeon only one small storey below the level of the street; only a fleeting step or so from the nerve-centre of business which affects us all! I could fill a book with the sights I saw. It was called Suite 55A, an innocuous name, certainly enough, but for sheer lavishness... what emperors ever entertained their guests more splendidly? What Persian satrap ever was so graced with beautiful women? A cloud of heavy smoke overhung the room; it was like some exotic presence lending strength and abandon to the whole place.

I tried desperately to squint through the smoke, to catch a glimpse of the prancing, writhing concubines, dancing upon a raised platform in the centre of the room and from thence leaping nymph-like over the gorgeously-upholstered chairs and Chesterfields. I was thus occupied, taking in everything my eyes could bear, gazing at the richly-ornamented furniture in shades of royal blue and flamboyant scarlet; breathing in with deep breaths the sweet fragrance of foreign liqueurs and wines when suddenly — oh, gentlemen, would you believe it? — I was overcome by a sense of companionship. I felt rather than saw that I was among friends. I espied faces I knew and respected and oh, gentlemen, how delighted I was to know that I was amid such irreproachable company. I beheld, through the umbra, first William Bangus, and then Pidley Smith, clutching a pretty concubine by the skirt. What glory shot through my bones at the realization, gentlemen that I was not after all, beset on all sides by evil. My faith in human nature was restored, I had come anticipating incalculable sin and now, I have no hesitation whatsoever in remaining. For gentlemen, how estimable is my company, and gentlemen, as I have said, what a magnificent place is this.

Apathetic Alembics

The time has come when the lewdly gabumphing behemoth of Definitive Negativism is woofing and scratching at the anterior portal of the collective conscience which is yours and mine. Shall we welcome this greasy, great, grey leviathan with open blood-stained hands, or shall we slap its hirsute and horrendous wrist with a heavy humanitarian bond of raw ravioli?

"Yes!" we cry sanctimoniously, but the still, small voice of the Adlerian Oversoul hisses, loudly enough for all to hear and titter, "Nitchero!"

Shall we, then, being as we are, and feeling as we do, and having, presumably, an unshakable moral and spiritual bias, rooted in the cumulo nimbus cloud bank of the Greco-Judao-Christian tradition, remain sedentarily on our well insulated ischial tuberosities and let the hour of destiny tick itself away unnoticed? Or shall we fling ourselves myopically prostrate before the tawdry altars of Ishtar and Astaroth?

A spectre has flattened its broad, purple umbrage across the wasteland of our mediocre mores, innervated and innocuous from the superficial rituals of jejune reiteration. How long? How long before our apathetic alembics and nihilistic nostrums give way to a clear-ordered apperception of the True, the Good, and the Larceny?

Prolonged, monocular contemplation of our respective umbilici may yet provide us with the Answer.

Failure

It has got to stop. If it goes on there will be bad results. Simcoe Hall has failed. It is sad but true. Students do not seem to know it. They could, if they would. They don't.

Why has Simcoe Hall failed? They have failed because we have failed. If we had not failed no one would blame S.H.

The S.C.M. has failed. It has failed to see. To see what? To see that they have not succeeded. But succeeded in what? Why, succeeded in showing us where we have failed.

Hart House has failed. It has failed to help the S.C.M. show us where we have failed. Also, it has failed to provide good government. It needs less democracy and more benign dictatorship.

The SAC has failed. It has failed to show Hart House how to do it. As yet the SAC is still too democratic. They could stamp out all elements of democracy if they tried.

The whole university has failed. It has failed in its pursuit of Falsehood. There are still too many people interested in the truth. More vigor is needed to recruit these people for the campaign for error.

University administrators have failed. With a little work they could reduce the SAC to a division of the Bursar's office. This would make the SAC what it is supposed to be. After all those peerless men who drafted the University of Toronto Act knew what was best for us all.

NFCUS has failed. It has failed to assist the university and the students in their aims. They could really get to the grass roots if they undertook the right campaign. What they need is a campaign to encourage student apathy and lethargy, and to remove responsible government.

We have all failed. Since we have failed Simcoe Hall, the administration, the professors, the S.C.M., Hart House, the SAC and all the rest have failed.

Subversives Unite In War

Walking up devonshire place the other day on my way to the casey for a slow draught i was assailed by the sound of psalmody proceeding through the windows of the mens' residence; which sound was so fraught with intensity and forebode so much fury that i was concerned lest some dastardly plot was hatching.

Remembering full well the warfare launched against snilda's in my halcyon days as an undergraduate i was filled with terror lest some similar exploit was being planned by the "boys" since such an attack on the "weaker sex" would be sure to end in disaster, which fact is attested by the mounting casualties in the neverending war of the diamonds.

Making my way through the nearest coal chute and winding around and over the bottles (empty, alas!) i persevered on a direct path towards the noise.

In the ker (kids common room) i discovered several specimens of the species (male) gathered around a glowing fractionating column and singing various specimens of bawdy songs the like of which never seared the atmosphere in those days when joe, sid and i romped through the halls of old c.u., but then we were more serious and had little time for those things.

As the noise seemed to reach a climax, a sudden hush fell over the men as the door opened and in stepped bull harass dressed all in smart new blue and white tights with a nice new cape slung around his shoulder which all didn't seem peculiar to the men, but struck me dumb with amazement, but not half as much as when bull began to speak in hushed tones about what bad luck they were having in getting support for their movement from bzkxltz or jxkz who didn't seem able to provide an effective rallying point for the interests of students, but were unable to support those that could.

sister annie carpark and b.a. macfunnell had promised support but at the last minute b.a. had been called away to a meeting of the nxyzpgd and sister annie wanted to wait until he returned. but she sent will hangus and merry hellan bigson from sigma alpha kappa instead, along with bord gurlhurl who tried to explain why bzkxltz couldn't help unless the fee was raised to fifty brews which didn't seem to please bull at all.

After considerable discussion, one member wanted to know why merry hell had been allowed in, but was informed that the board of stews had passed a special motion permitting males to use certain parts of heart house in return for permission for females to enter those sacred halls, this explanation was hardly satisfactory.

At this point, violent arguments flared and fights broke out over the constitutional question over all of which bull harass was attempting to shout down the more mouthy of the members, but had little success and finally getting an opening, he shouted i declare this meeting of the get-men-back-into-heart-house club adjourned.

Tense Moment

The SAC held a special meeting last night to decide how the budget would be allocated. Shown in the heat of debate are SAC members Shmoe Hokum, Dentistry, Claude Button, Larceny Editor, One-Eyed Benny, and one unidentified member from the Faculty of Music.

Comment Editors Spurn Job Offer

The editors of Campus Comment, an independent student paper of political opinion, have refused an offer by Cotton Batten, Larceny Editor, of highly paid masthead positions on the Larceny's staff.

"We need the money," said Comment Editor Ally Millard, "but we have our reputations to think of. Our careers would certainly suffer if we allowed our names to be linked with the Larceny's, whose extreme and radical views we cannot condone."

Comment sub-editor Alexis Gigeroff refused to make any other comment than "I just think that the Larceny is simply not cricket."

new committee called the Bedroom Sleeping Committee will be formed to direct all sleeping accommodations and see that no-one is ever left without a bed.

The warden is hoping for a large number of nominations to this committee. "Aside from the academic purposes which any male or female undergraduate has in coming to this University, I know it would be one of the truly educational and rewarding experiences to serve on such a committee."

The electioneering procedure will be the same as ever, except that there will only be two slates, a female slate and a male slate. "There are many more women on this campus than men," said the assistant to the warden. "and under our peculiarly democratic system of voting I am sure that the slate procedure will insure them a proportionate amount of candidates." Just about anything goes for campaigns he said. In the past men have used women in bathing suits to get elected. It is rumoured that this year some enterprising women are displaying men without tights for their campaigns.

It is expected that the dark room activities of the camera club will take on a new turn. In the past, it has been a place of lewd pictures and perverted inquiries. The voyeurism will now be replaced by outlets for healthy activities.

"I shall be very pleased to have the women around," said the warden with his usual friendly smile, "and I shall do my best to look after them as I have the men."

Hamlet at the Globe

(Reprinted from Ye Varsitye, Feb. 25, 1592)

Presently fhowing at Ye Globe is another Potte-boiler by our esteemed Will Shaksper, yclepyt "Hamlet", to wit. As is his wont, Master Shaksper, hath ftolen his plot bodylye from an hoary tale, long recounted about ye chimnye corner by olde fishwyves, and hath proceeded to make an hashe of it. Yis bromide of whiche we speak concerneth a younge prince, (Hamlet, by name) of more yan questionable fanity. Yis Prince commenceth his misadventures by encountering his fathers ghouste (a creatyure in which none but ye ignoraunt, in yis daye and age, believe). Ye ghouste claymeth to have been murdered full foullye. As anye follower of ye pulpe detective fiction will feetyly divine, Hamlet auvengeyth yis bloudyie murther full bloudylye, in ye course of whiche tausk he killeth right gorylye his dam, an olde greybeard counsellour of ye kinges, his ladye-love, her brother, two ancient college chums, and assorted pages, seneschales, extras, and stagehands. Veryllye, ye tale recompenseth in fadisme and fexe yat whiche it lacketh in taste, imagination and fignificaunce.

Shaksper also betrayeth a lamentable tendencye to belabour ye eare of ye listener with bad advice and cheape philosophye, such as would cause anye fresshe-man in oure universityes to turn up his nose. "To be, or not to be?" demandeth Hamlet, in one of the tritest, most hopelesselye garbled discourses it hath been our misfortune to fuffer.

Dick Burbage playeth ye title role with his customarye bombaste. He biddeth fayre to make ye name of "Hamlet" synonymous with overacting and shame.

We greatlye regret yat Master Shaksper, who, forsooth, feemeth to have some talent, persisteth in sacrificing Arte to the moste obvious and distasteful of boxe-office appeal. Yis forte of thinge may well make him riche, but we doubt if it will redound to his lasting credit.

Requiescat In Pace

With some regret, the Varsity reports the early and unfortunate passing of an occasional contributor to its pages. Monday evening, seized by a fit of acute melancholy, Art Reviewer was rushed to the Hart House Gallery where he declined rapidly, no treatment was successful and he murmured his last words at eleven o'clock. Before midnight he had left the terrestrial domain.

Nevertheless, a strongly reflective cast was evident in his nature; he was often found by his friends in a relaxed attitude, with his eyes shut, thinking. This aspect of his personality, complemented by an unsuspected touch of sadism, finally proved strongest, and he turned from drawing to criticism. It has been suggested by some less than sympathetic persons that here was the first symptom of the decay that culminated in his untimely end.

In recent months he was a familiar sight about the Varsity office; at least once a weekday evening you might stumble over him or his everpresent satchel standing helpfully in the middle of the newsroom floor.

The disease that wrested him from a much loved world is one of those few puzzles still remaining to test the ingenuity of

The birth of Art Reviewer occurred shortly after the Great Depression, perhaps as a relapse in world affairs. He was educated at well-known Toronto schools; his teachers never said of him "Though less than brilliant, he is a steady worker". He greatly appreciated W. H. Davies' "What is this world if, full of care . . ." and he stood and stared more than most.

It was first in kindergarten that evidence of future artistic interests was noted by his fond parents. He had a feeling for the cutting out of paper dolls that marked him as a man to be watched. His early talent developed into a strong feeling for form and colour that marked all he attempted. An early work of his in pencil on the dining room wall was characterized before erasure by one viewer as "strong", "flamboyant".

modern scientists. Its first symptoms as he displayed them were a great love of the later Picasso paintings, and a marked tendency to avoid small children with coloured crayons. The final unheralded attack left him whispering intensely "flamboyant", and "strong, — oh so strong". His doctor does not quote his last words.

Surviving him are his parents and most young Canadian artists.

THROUGH A WHISKY HAZE

I saw it. It was awful.

The trouble with all these shows is that they only emphasize sex. Sex, sex, . . . what was I saying.

First of all the plot. There wasn't any.

Secondly the actors and actresses. They were male and female and that's about all. Wait a minute, there was one. In Act II Scene III there was the most realistic wolf howl I have ever heard, and guess who came on stage right afterwards; Cloppetra. I think that was the only sound made by this guy Tony something or other. I think he has a great future, and will be a star.

Thirdly, the singing. Now I have heard worse, but only in the middle of the night with the cats and dogs outside my window.

Fourthly the music.

Fifthly the orchestra. It was a fifty piece orchestra, but it takes more than fifty pieces to make a saxophone.

However there was one redeeming feature that made the last ten acts completely painless. This was the rye that could be obtained during the intermissions. Now this was as good as any I have tasted, and it didn't hit you till you got back to your seat, or someone else's.

BRIGADOWN BANNED

The PU College and St. Tyke's music club announced regretfully to-day that they were forced to take their current production of Brigadown off the boards due to censorship. It was discovered that the show had just been put on the 15 I.d.x list and all St. Tyke's players were forced to withdraw.

Speaking OF SPORT

By PEGGY WEST

Last Saturday night I was sitting in my usual spot behind the bench, watching the Farcy Boo icemen play their arch-rivals, Les Carabins. The Boos, as usual, were having a pretty easy time of it, whaling the tar out of their opposition, until the third period when the Frenchies got a little bit hot under the collar, and started a fight in their own end.

Well the referee — they call them homers down in Verdun — figured the Boos were causing all the trouble, so they slapped a couple of penalties on the Farcy club, and the Boo captain, Steve Redney, naturally complained about the calls as is the duty of all good captains. The two of them did a couple of pirouettes around centre ice, Redney trying to get his mates in the game, and the referee shaking his head and motioning him away. Well the 5,000-odd fans in the Auditorium got pretty huffed at that and shouted for the ref to throw Redney out of the game. But the colloquy at centre ice continued, and Redney stayed in the game.

Just then the Boo manager turned to me and said, "You know what's really going on out there, don't you?" Well I didn't, but I thought you'd like to know, so I'll pass it on to you whether you like it or not.

It seems that the last time the Boos played in Verdun the Carabins were out to clean their clocks. As usual a fight started in the third period, and, as usual, the Frenchies were at the bottom of it. Well the referees — one of them was Bunny Smith, a misplaced veteran who used to play with Redney in the Scarboro league — threw a couple of minors at the Boos for fighting, and in the ensuing lull in the game Redney skated over to Smith, ostensibly to complain.

"That was a good call Bunny," said Redney, "There's no doubt about it; our man was slashing."

"Why thanks Red, I'm glad you see it my way," said the ref, "I always try to call them fair." Well Bunny turned to recommence the game but Redney skated up to him.

"How's the wife and kids Bunny," he asked.

"Pretty well," replied Smith, "Thanks for asking."

"Well I just thought I'd inquire," said Redney, "I haven't seen them for a quite a while. Give them my best will you."

"Why sure, Red", replied Bunny, "I'll tell them you were asking."

By this time the crowd of Frenchies was howling for the refs to throw Redney out of the game, but Smith couldn't give him a penalty because he was just telling him how good his refereeing was. So once again Bunny turned to start the game, but Redney skated away to the bench, threw his gloves on the ice, and moved right in on Smith.

"You should have given that bird five minutes for slashing, Bunny," said Redney, "He's been doing it all night. But it was a good call anyway. I was afraid you might miss it when your back was turned."

"Thanks Red, I don't miss many of them if I can help it. This job gets pretty rough at times, you know."

"Well you're doing all right Bunny," said Redney, "Just keep it up and don't forget to remember me to the wife and kids."

Well after that interlude Redney was ready to play hockey again, even if the fans in the Auditorium had it in for him, and Smith never threw him out of the game. I don't know why I'm telling this story, because it isn't really funny, and it doesn't have any social significance. Does everything have to have social significance?

The Toronto Argonauts, this city's only professional football team, last night in a surprise move announced their plans to sign the University of Toronto's Bob Masterson to coach their 1955 entry in the Big Four. Terms of the contract have not yet been released, but it is understood that Masterson is likely to accept the position which, according to informed sources, would be of at least three years' duration.

The Argonauts' decision came as a surprise to football circles here, although Masterson is recognized as one of the finest football minds in the country, and a keen defensive coach. The resignation of former Argonaut mentor Frank Clair some three weeks ago left room for wide speculation as his successor, but it was generally believed that the Toronto club was searching for coaching talent in the National Football League.

Masterson is a veteran of eight years of pro football in the United States, with the Washington Redskins, the New York Yankees, and the New York Giants. He was also four years at the University of Miami, where he captained the Varsity squad in his last two seasons.

In 1947 he came to the University of Toronto as assistant to Bobby Coulter, and then took over as head coach in 1948. In seven years at Varsity he has coached the Blues to three Intercollegiate championships, in 1948, 1951, and 1954. Bob has also doubled in the winter season as Head Basketball Coach and has always produced top-notch contenders in the Intercollegiate league.

There can be no doubt that the Argonauts have made a wise

End Of An Era

BOB MASTERSON

choice in selecting Masterson for the position made vacant by the resignation of Frank Clair, but it leaves the University with a slight problem in replacing him. At the moment there are no official candidates for the job, which is expected to entail both football and basketball coaching duties. Logical successor is Intermediate basketball coach John McManus, who assisted Masterson last season when the Blues won the Intercollegiate football title, but there are several other possibilities outside the University.

There has been talk of the possibility of luring Bernie Hodgetts away from his ivory tower at Trinity College School, Port Hope, but the Athletic Association is likely to meet with considerable difficulty in accomplishing this task. Hodgetts has been at the Little Big Four school for quite a few years now, coaching both football and basketball, while teaching Upper School history. His record at TCS includes two Little Big Four gridiron championships in the last four seasons.

Other sources mention the possibility of reclaiming Frank Clair, but the "Professor" has already pledged himself to the University of Cincinnati. The coach who led the Argonauts to two Dominion championships in his five-year stint with the Toronto club is also considered to have a keen football mind, as well as an attitude typical of the college coach.

Should Masterson accept the contract which will begin this fall, it will be the end of an era at the University of Toronto. A coach who expects his players to give one hundred percent, and is always seeking perfection in his football coaching, he himself in return gives one hundred percent in his attention to thorough teaching, down to the minutest detail of the game. His record at Varsity is indeed enviable, it would be unfortunate to see it end.

Take It With a Grain of Salt

Montreal, Feb. 22 (CUP) — Amidst the state of upheaval presently apparent on the campus of the University of Toronto, caused by the reported efforts of the Argonaut football club to sign Varsity coach Bob Masterson, news released by the Athletic Board of Control at McGill this afternoon has Vic Obeck vacating his post as Athletic Director to take over full-time control of the Montreal Alouettes.

Western coach John Metras is supposed to have agreed to terms for the fall of 1955 to direct McGill's gridiron activity, and Queen's coach Frank Tyndall is conferring with representatives of the University of Western Ontario concerning a possible opening there.

In the biggest Intercollegiate shake-up ever seen, the only position unfilled is that of football coach at Queen's. The latest word from the Kingston school has R. J. Gray, a former coach under the University of Toronto's extensive training system, slated to take the reins in September.

Gray has unsuccessfully coached the Trinity Black Panthers of the Varsity Intramural league for the past two seasons, but is supposed to be one of the keenest strategists in the country.

Heart House To Be Scene Of Intercollegiate Boat Race

This weekend sees the second annual renewal of the Intercollegiate Boat Race, in which teams from the four major Universities will take part.

The meet will begin Saturday at 2:00 with time trials in the pint, quart, half-case, and full-case events, with the final of the marathon getting under way at 4:00.

The University of Toronto will be well represented in the marathon classic by forty engineers, who are reported to have been in training for the past six months. In this event the McGill starting rules will be observed, where no contestant may begin until his nearest team-mate has placed an empty bottle on the table.

Word from London shows Westminster with two fast men in the pint event, each of whom have posted times of better than 5.7 seconds. However, Varsity coach "Birdie" Saltzman tells us that the Blues have three fast men from a nearby College who have yet to complete eligibility certificates.

In the quart and half-case events Varsity will be represented by six more engineers, in fact the Engineers make up more than four-fifths of the team. The other fifth are Artsmen who are unable to compete in anything but the pint event, due to a lack of available practice time.

Coach Saltzman said seventy-five candidates turned out for the University championships last weekend but most were turned away because of an inability to compete in anything but the tea-cup class.

Ice Blues Top Dynamos In World Hockey

By HEWLIT FOSDICK

Berchtesgaden, Germany, Feb. 23, 1955. The Blues have landed! One of the biggest surprises and the best kept secret was revealed here as the CAHA announced that the University of Toronto Blues had been sent to Germany to take the place of the Pentiction V's in the World Ice Hockey Championships to be played here next week.

The affair was kept so secret, that not a single soul even dreamed of such an event happening. The story is being revealed first to the University of Toronto, and then to the papers and radios of the world. The team left Monday night under the pretext that they were going to play an exhibition tilt with the Sudbury Wolves of the NOHA.

The team arrived here in Germany early in the afternoon yesterday and immediately after a quick snack they rushed over to the Talsman Stadium to take over for the Pentiction club. They played the Moscow Dynamos in a pre-scheduled warm up and walloped the Red team 39-0 before some fifteen thousand wildly cheering fans.

The Blues' big line again started things off as they counted for twenty-one of the goals scored. Paul Knox, Dave Reid and Clare Fisher each scored seven goals as they personally wreaked havoc among the once mighty Dynamos. Every player on the club scored a goal. Even Hugh Curry, the Blues' goalie, took time out to skate the length of the ice to score.

While the first line did most of the scoring, the other lines were content to check the Dynamos dizzy. Then when the occasion presented itself, each player proceeded to score. Dave Stephen, Dave Jackson, John Adams, and John Akitt each scored two goals apiece. Bill Moreau, Lou Appleby, John Tolton, Ernie Bodnar, Ross Woods, Don Cossar, Ken Lawson and John Gray tallied once each. Jack Kennedy scored once, but the Dynamos didn't approve of the way that he scored. Kennedy had been talking to the Dynamo goalie in an Irish brogue which so entranced the Red goalie that he forgot all about the game. Thus, when the puck came to Kennedy, he had no trouble in putting it into the net.

When interviewed after the game, Ivan Harthousey, the Dynamos captain, said that the Dynamos had been out the night before. He claimed that "the dirty capitalistic pigs spiked our vodka". The Dynamos were treated to a party given by Bim Tuck the night before and were given ghoulish, polieyka, kulbasa, sweet pickle pie with ice cream, vodka, apples and water. They were given the raspberry by Knox, Fisher and Reid.

The feeling among the Varsity players was that the score could have been larger if they could have slept on the plane. It seems that some professors had handed out a topic for an essay which was supposed to be due the day the Blues arrive back from Europe. Naturally, all of the players put their school work ahead of everything else.

Tomorrow, the Blues take on the high flying American team while the Pentiction V's go home. It seems that their only fault is that they can win games only in overtime. They have to come from behind to win. The Blues, on the other hand, are content to pick up a large score and wait for the other team to catch up. They think that the Moscow team will catch up tomorrow. On their sleep, that is.

Interfaculty Innovations

An open meeting of the Intramural Athletic Association yesterday adopted a plan which will radically revamp the interfaculty sports program for next year.

The move, which was considered by informed sources to be an attempt to inject a little color into the program, involves the introduction of several games of foreign origin. Among those accepted were pastimes from Russia, Argentina and Wales.

A spokesman for the association, Phineas Finch, said, following the meeting, that the innovation "will add a real international flavour to interfaculty competition".

Probably the most readily adopted foreign sport was the Russian game of Face-slapping. This pastime, while it never quite achieved any national status, has been spasmodically popular since its invention at Kiev, in 1931.

Face-slapping is said to have been instituted by two comrades, Bezborodny and Goniuxs by name, under the inspirational influence of too much vodka. These pioneers took such delight in their discovery that, in their original match, they set an endurance record of thirty hours of toe-to-toe slapping, which has never been equalled.

The Intramural Face-slapping League, however, will make no immediate attempt to better this mark," said spokesman Finch. "At present we're more interested in organizing it for interfaculty competition."

By EDGAR R. MUDDLE

Finch revealed that the game will be played with four ten-minute quarters, with two-minute rest periods between quarters. Victory will be decided through a method of scoring whereby clean lacerations count five points each, ragged cuts three, and ordinary welts and bruises one.

In the interest of safety, all participants wearing spectacles will be required to wear protective guards, available at the Tote-box Room, Hart House.

Another game which is expected to meet with immediate popularity is the Welsh sport of Purring. In this, contestants wear heavy shoes with reinforced toes, and stand with hands on one another's shoulders. At a given signal they commence kicking each other in the shins, with the first one to back away losing.

For interfaculty competition, this game will be played in best-two-out-of-three sets. Teams will consist of two players each, with substitution being allowed only after a "fall". Plans are being considered to develop a tag-team type of Purring. (Note: soccer boots may be worn in this sport, but cleats must be removed to prevent injury.)

A sport that is expected to replace basketball is one proposed by Senator Jose Smoko, of Argentina. After his original suggestion of bullfighting was rejected (on the grounds that Hart House could not handle the crowds), Senator Smoko introduced El Gato.

This was originated by the Gauchos (Argentine cowboys) and was played on horseback, on a 200-yard long field. The object is a leather ball, similar to a basketball but with leather handles which enable players to grab it. They throw it at one another's nets, forty-inch circular goals at opposite ends of the field, with each hoop counting one point.

The old game was so fast and rough (rival players were allowed to dismount each other), that it was banned by the government. It was revived, under watered-down rules, in 1937.

Even with the revised rules this sport presented difficulties for the association. However, with the patient cooperation of Senator Smoko, the game was adapted to Toronto University's limited facilities.

All games will be played in the main gym of Hart House. To compensate for the small floor, it will be played on Shetland ponies. Each pony will be equipped with white rubber shoes, so as not to

Form New Newspaper Fights Campus Reds

Obblebobble Gargoyle, Editor-in-Chief of the P.U. Gargle, announced today that plans are nearing completion for the incorporation of the Gargle with Hoity-Toity, publication of the Skule of Praktikal Siense Gargoyle maintained that "The union of these two cultural publications will provide an effective voice for the conservative elements on campus who decry the liberal radicalism creeping into the pages of The Larceny, published as seldom as possible by the Sigma Alpha Kappa (SAK) fraternity."

Hoity-Toity editor, Tick Domson, could not be reached for comment as he was at his tailor being fitted for white tie and tails, newly prescribed attire for professionals from S.P.S.

Sein Gott, chairman of the S.A.K. committee, was discovered participating in the bi-weekly devotional period conducted in Suite 55A, under the auspices of Bliithe Cotton, copy-runner for the Larceny.

Between hymns in praise of Will Hangus and Bull Harass, twin deities of S.A.K., Gott observed, "Let da bums try anything an' we'll mobilize em". This was taken as a reference to fellow-fraternity members, Ike Mover and Go Slowgin, who have recently combined forces with Gott in an attempt to prevent attacks on The Larceny.

Pidley Smith, chief executioner for the Kaput, and Josephine McNutty, director of the "Men-must-Go" movement in Heart House, deplored the stand of Gargle and Hoity-Toity. "This will lead to the dissolution of the federated colleges system," said Smith. "It represents an encroachment of conservative tendencies. What we need is more individuals like the people who work on The Larceny."

McNutty said, "I'm dreadfully concerned that this sort of thing should be handled by the committees of Heart House. After all, this is an educational institution in the broadest sense and we should be giving some direction to these cultural and spiritual endeavours."

Sum Batty, editor of The Larceny, replied when queried about the proposed union, "Hell!"

Smith Cause Of Wrangle Refuses Comment On Sex

In a sensational announcement yesterday, President Pidley Smith startled a press conference by stating that he strongly preferred good to evil, "because it is better".

"The trouble with the world today," said President Smith, "is that there is too much evil, and not enough goodness". His suggested remedy: "More goodness."

"I realize," Smith admitted, "that this statement is likely to arouse bitter controversy, but I feel that one should stand up for one's convictions. Don't you?"

However, the President refused to commit himself when asked for his opinions on motherhood

"You don't really expect a University president to state his views on a subject connected with sex, do you?"

mark the hardwood, and will wear a saddle blanket of appropriate faculty or college colors.

In conclusion, Mr. Finch remarked that the Intramural Association is "highly optimistic" over the new plans. "We regard this," he said, "as the beginning of a whole new era in university sports. It is a high point in international relationships."

Frost 'Very Interested' In Bursary Campaign

Dominion-Provincial bursaries may be stepped up next year from an average $177 to $200-per-beneficiary.

So it appeared this week following a NFCUS Scholarship Committee meeting with Premier Leslie Frost at Queen's Park, Tuesday. "They seemed to be very much behind the students," declared Peter Martin, Ontario vice-president of the National Federation of University Students.

Although the seven-man delegation making the Queen's Park visit, was pushing for overall scholarship increases, the emphasis was on Dominion-Provincial bursaries.

"Premier Frost appeared very sympathetic and promised to send Education Department officials to Ottawa to talk the matter over with Dominion authorities," Martin said.

Cabinet ministers of the Frost government including the Hon. Dunlop of the Department of Education and other educational authorities, attended the meeting.

The student delegation included student representatives from Queen's, Western and McMaster Universities, Seven Ontario Colleges were represented in a three-page brief submitted to the Premier.

The student delegation pointed out that although there were more Dominion-Provincial bursaries at present than there had been, their individual value had been chopped down.

Emmanuel Leads SHARE Campaign

Although the university's student SHARE campaign — now in its second week — has copped just under one-third of a $6,000 objective, Bill Crossin, Collection chairman said last night that student reception was improved over last year.

He explained that he expected the figure in reality was considerably greater than the $1,673 announced. Collectors, unlike last year, were not turning their donations into headquarters immediately, he said.

Though the official campaign ends today, canvassers will continue until the $6,000-mark is reached.

Right now, Emmanuel College is in the lead. Members have contributed ninety-seven per-cent of their objective. Not far behind are the Faculty of Nursing with eighty per-cent, and Victoria College with sixty-three per-cent.

Mr. Crossin said that co-operation of the Varsity, and campaigning done by Louis Perinham, Canadian Secretary for World University Service, have been instrumental in helping the students appreciate the importance of the campaign.

SHARE money goes towards education and welfare in countries such as Pakistan and India.

St. Michael's Protests In Seven Foot Petition

A petition containing 215 names was sent to the Varsity office, "in protest of the low calibre of certain material published in the recent humour issue of The Varsity, considering such a standard unrepresentative of the general opinion of this university."

The signers of the petition were largely from St. Michael's College, with the exception of a few from S.P.S. and Pharmacy.

Approximately forty per-cent of the enrollment of St. Michael's included their names on the petition, which was circulated yesterday.

Among those who refused to sign were the Publication's Commissioner and the Varsity copy-runner; both students at the college.

One of the assistant news editors however, also from St. Mike's, included her name on the long document.

The movement was begun by a group of second-year girls, but signers came from both sexes and all years, in a rough cross-section of the college.

When submitted to this office, the paper was taped together into a sheet seven feet long. Editor Clyde Batten commented, "I wish that half the time and energy spent compiling that document could have been spent on The Varsity."

1955-56 Duo Appointed In Unanimous SAC Vote

The Varsity is to have co-editors-in-chief next year.

Wendy Michener and Robert Brown were appointed Wednesday night at a meeting of the Students' Administrative Council to share the editorial driver's seat. The vote of SAC was unanimous in favour of the appointment.

A recommendation suggesting Miss Michener and Brown was given to the meeting by the Publications' Commission.

No other applications were received by the Publications' Commission.

The appointments were in sharp contrast to that of Editor-in-Chief Clyde Batten last year. Batten entered the editorial scene in a blaze of campus controversy.

Miss Michener is a third-year student this year in the English Language and Literature course. She is enrolled at Trinity College. She has been a member of the Varsity staff for three years.

Her experience includes a term as music critic and she has been in charge of the music department of the paper and has edited a French language column for The Varsity's CUP department. She has also had experience in writing feature-stories, news, editorials and this year was in charge of the Art, Music and Drama page.

Robert Brown is a third-year Commerce and Finance student, registered in University College. He has had two years' experience on The Varsity, first as a news-writer and reporter and later doing features, editorials and special articles. A holder of The Varsity pin, Mr. Brown has been this year's Managing Editor of The Varsity.

The joint application to the Publications' Commission, pointed out that The Varsity demanded a "tremendous amount" of work and that it was felt that a joint editorship would lighten the load since both students would be in their fourth year.

Most of this year's staff would be back, the editors-to-be pointed out in their application. They anticipated no problem in filling key positions on the paper, a single-page, typed application stated.

A particular feature the editors said they planned next year was a special edition of the paper to commemorate the 75th Anniversary of the paper.

Marilyn Fhoomie Elected at Vic; Doesn't Exist

A candidate who didn't even exist was boosted into office, Tuesday, by students at Victoria College.

When the polls closed, it was discovered that Miss Marilyn Fhoomie, a pretty campus female, was just a figment of everyone's imagination. She was carried into office on the lips of a well-organized whispering campaign, it was reported.

Four candidates were to have been chosen at the elections to represent the 1958 graduating class of the college.

With 75-per-cent of the class voting, Miss Fhoomie led the polls by a sweeping majority.

While other candidates splattered every available wall and fence with posters and pictures of themselves, only one picture of Miss Fhoomie appeared. The shapely curves and beautiful profile of Miss Fhoomie's picture assured her of getting the vote of even the most discriminating males.

With 14 candidates from which only four could be elected, it came as a surprise to the scrutineers that one girl with whom none of them were familiar, should receive such a large number of votes. The CRO was about to announce the election results when he learned a very perturbing fact that was to cast a new light on Marilyn's victory. She didn't exist.

There will be three more issues of The Varsity, coming out on Tuesday March 1, Thursday March 3, and Wednesday March 9.

Travel To and In Europe Subject At Orientation

A four hundred percent increase in attendance at the last "travel orientation" meeting was noted, reported Ron Gould, co-chairman of the local World University Service committee. The topic was the ways and means of travelling to and in Europe.

The same topic will continue to be discussed at the next meeting, Gould announced. This will be held next Wednesday, at 1:00 p.m., in room 4 U.C. General travel information is supplied and specific problems that are brought up are discussed.

At the last meeting, Gould said, Mr. Al Thomas, assistant to the director of the Canadian Association for Adult Education, spoke to the group. Mr. Thomas suggested that for transatlantic passage, working one's way across was the cheapest way (free) but the most difficult. Because of the union, it takes a lot of time to get a job, he explained.

At the meeting it was stated that one can travel comfortably and inexpensively to Europe, through the services of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, through the National Association of students in the United States, and through the Dutch or French student unions.

The advantages of student ships is that they are cheaper, all one class, and the passengers are pretty well all students, said a WUS spokesman.

It was announced that no student groups were being arranged for travel by air service this year.

It was suggested that if one has been to Europe before, it is possible to get passage free by going over as a guide or as an advisor.

"Whether one is going by air or by sea travel, you should get your reservations early," Gould declared.

The cheapest—and the slowest—way of travelling in Europe is by bicycle, Mr. Thomas said. He pointed out that one could take the bicycle on a train if necessary. One can also save money by taking advantage of excursion rates, especially on the British and French railways.

Hostelling, especially in small towns, is the cheapest method of accommodation, Gould said. Another inexpensive place to stay is at students' residences, he added.

Report on Athletics

The bleachers in the North and South ends of Varsity Stadium will be taken down for most football games as a result of spectator rowdiness, reported SAC Athletic Commissioner Ron Anco, III Pharmacy, in his first, last and only report of the year to the last SAC meeting Wednesday.

Anco stated that the U. of T. Athletic Directorate had decided that, in view of the death of a University policeman at one of the games last fall, the stands would not be put up except when ticket sales warranted it. By doing this, they hope to prevent students from getting in to the field at half-time and after the game, stated Anco.

The Athletics Commissioner also said that the Directorate has decided that attacks on referees by students warranted stern measures being taken. Anco said that the commission had stated that only once in 40 years had student rowdiness been such a concern to the Directorate.

The ROTC Cannon has been banned from all future football games, Anco said. The Directorate decided that the noise of the cannon frightened the spectators. The Directorate has also decided to introduce Curling as a new intercollegiate sport, if the other universities in Ontario are willing. Other sections of Anco's report dealt with the difficulty which the Athletic Directorate is having over radio and TV coverage. As London Life has cancelled their sponsorship of the Blue football games, these games will not be broadcast unless a new sponsor is found. Also, the Directorate expressed concern about the showing of Argo away-from-home games in Toronto on TV when the Blues were playing in Varsity Stadium.

Anco also reported that the Directorate would not have received the receipts that they expected from the football games except that the final Toronto-Queen's game was very well attended. The Directorate has paid off $20,000 of their $250,000 debt on Varsity Stadium this year.

One member of the SAC expressed concern over the condition of the year campus, which was being used by the Argos as a training field. Anco said that he would look into the matter.

The Athletic Directorate is completely independent of the SAC, and has only one student representative on it — the SAC Athletics Commissioner.

Record Turnout at Victoria 60% Vote for VCU Executive

Victoria College Union reported a record turnout at the annual election on Tuesday. Sixty per cent of the students, one of the best showings in several years, turned out to vote.

Class Executives, members of the Debating Parliament and the Men's and Women's Athletic Directorate were elected. There were 107 nominations for the 42 contested positions — another record.

The president and associate president of 5T6 are Don Stevenson and Marg Ann Gemmell. Ron Ostic and Mary Sheppard hold corresponding positions on the 5T7 executive. Gord Bruce is treasurer of 5T7, Gil Weatherstone is secretary and Eileen Patterson is social directress.

Jerry Helliener and Jackie Oldham were chosen president and associate president of 5T8. Mike Hutchison was elected treasurer; Molly Hewitt, secretary. Jim Foy is social director.

The president of the Men's Athletic Directorate, Don Hugo, was chosen by acclamation. Norm Alban is treasurer of the Directorate; Rick Harrop is its secretary.

Mary Foster is the new president of the Women's Athletic Directorate.

rectorate; Lib Doige is treasurer; Mary Nash is secretary. President of the Debating Parliament is Wes Turner. Bob Saunders is the new parliamentary secretary.

Blood Flows Over Cannon

A bloody discussion took place at the last SAC meeting over the blood campaign on the campus. S.P.S. rep. Walden maintained that the award for the highest percentage donating over some arbitrarily chosen quota was unjust.

Barb Flint, Blood Campaign manager, agreed that there was no fair method of having a blood contest on this campus. Miss Flint said that Skule Cannon would be awarded to St. Mike's, but Forestry said it would not hand over the cannon.

Miss Flint suggested that Toronto drop out of the inter-university blood competition for the Corpuscule Cup, as 1,412 pints is nowhere near the 50% of student body minimum required to compete.

Privilege to Aid Students Indian Commissioner Says

"It is not a duty, but a privilege to help the Indian students," commented Dr. R. A. Rauf, India's High Commissioner to Canada, at the SHARE banquet held last Monday night. "In India, we help the Burmese, because they are worse off than we are; it is a matter of friendly cooperation, not of pity but of charity. Caritas in Latin means love."

Dr. Rauf went on to discuss the conditions in India, particularly with respect to the students. He pointed out however, that he did not wish to excite the pity of the students in Canada. "There is a right and a wrong way to give," he said. "When one gives because one feels a human bond with all people in the world, then this is truly charity."

"From another point of view, the aid that India receives now is a link between the two countries, and the gratitude that will be felt will express itself if Canada should become poorer than India."

Speaking earlier, Warden McCulley expressed his credo: "I believe that whatever raises the worth and dignity of mankind is good. Regardless of what the theologians may say, I believe that the worth and dignity of man is a sufficient initial premise."

The Warden concurred that it was our privilege to help the Indian students, since "the most hard-pressed student here is far richer than any individual attending university in India."

Bill Angus, SAC president, gave a history of the SHARE campaign, and expressed the onus upon the students to SHARE. The idea of the community of humanity, the theme of all the speeches, was perhaps most amusingly stated by Lewis Perinbam, WUSC Executive Co-Secretary, describing the way that students from various countries would write about an elephant. "The German would write two volumes as an introduction to the social organization of the elephants. The Russian would interpret the elephant as a victim of the class war. The Frenchman would write of the love affairs of the elephant. The Indian would describe the over-population of the elephant. Perhaps the Canadian would decide whether or not the elephant was a federal or provincial matter."

Barry Cooke, capable SHARE campaign manager, was chairman of the banquet.

Deadline of Seminar Comes Today at Five

"All applications for the World University Service summer seminar in Japan and study tours in West Africa and West Indies must be submitted to the Students' Administrative Council office by 5:00 p.m. this afternoon!"

Gay Sellers, co-chairman of the local WUS committee, emphasized that today was the last day for applying for the WUS scholarships. She said that the selection committee would be considering the applications during the next week.

Students Chosen For Assignments By Mademoiselle

MADemoisELLE, an American women's magazine, has chosen Wendy Michener and Margery Stern to represent the U. of T. on the publication's College Board.

Miss Michener and Miss Stern are two of the 700 students who competed with applicants from colleges all over the country to win a place on the Board. They will report to MADemoisELLE on college life at this university, and will complete three assignments in competition for one of the twenty Guest Editorships to be awarded by the magazine at the end of May.

The Guest Editors will be brought to New York for four weeks next June to help write, edit and illustrate MADemoisELLE'S 1955 August College Edition. Their transportation will be paid to and from New York and they will receive a regular salary for their work.

Margery Stern, an exchange student from Smith College, is a third year Arts student at University College. Wendy Michener is in third year at Trinity. Both are Varsity staffers.

tion committee would be considering the applications during the next week.

Miss Sellers also pointed out that the local WUS committee, in order to send two students on the seminar, must raise $700 ($350 per student). With this in mind, she said, they have been approaching business organizations, service clubs, etc. in Toronto.

She said that a letter had also been sent out to all the fraternities around the Toronto campus and that a number of them had already replied, offering support to the program, and contributing money.

"It is a very gratifying result," she said. "I feel that this co-operation on the part of the fraternities is one of the best signs of co-operation between fraternities and the campus."

Applications Now Chorus and Orch. Asst. Conductors

Applications are now being received for the positions of Assistant Conductors of the University Chorus and Orchestra. The only qualification for the job, stated a spokesman for the Music Committee of the SAC, are "adeptness for and interest in" the positions.

The Assistant Conductors will be expected to take charge of and conduct some part of each concert that the University Chorus and Orchestra gives. Applications should be made in writing to the SAC office in the old observatory, and must be received before March 11.

Don't Spoil Ballots In Wed. HH Election

More than five percent of all ballots cast in Hart House elections last year were spoiled. This is an unfortunate and somewhat jolting experience, said Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden, last night. He expressed hope that this would not be the case in this year's election, which will be held next Wednesday.

Being an engineer, by training and a Hart House staff member by adoption, he put away his slide rule and added, "Check marks and numbers are not accepted as alternatives for the standard X, which is the correct mark for the ballot".

"Anybody who votes for more than the number of candidates stated on the ballot will have his ballot rejected. Members casting their ballots are expected to do nothing more than to put the maximum number of X's allowed (or less) when voting," he said.

He said he believed that errors were sometimes made due to excitement or inexperience. "If any voting member reads the signs in the Polling Booths such mistakes can be avoided," he stated.

Responsibility

At last night's SAC meeting there was considerable discussion concerning the handling of the Blood Blitz. There can be no doubt that the method of conducting it was unfair, but the contention of the manager of the campaign that there is no more valid method is well taken.

We are alarmed, however, over the proposal to make the Student Service Commission similar to the SAC, in that one member from each college would be either elected or appointed to a post on the commission.

Such a move would give us three commissions very similar in construction. The SAC is comprised of members from each college and faculty. The External Affairs Commission is similar, and now the Student Service Commission would have a similar constitution.

What now is to be the function of the SAC member-at-large? As it is now, a member of the SAC who does not fill some specific council post has nothing to do. Members of council filling important positions, must not only fulfill adequately the requirements of his position but also act as representative from his faculty.

A possible solution might be to have more important posts filled by people elected in campus-wide elections. By this means the council members would have no duties other than to represent their faculties and to serve on certain commissions. By this means the duality now created by organizations like the External Affairs Commission and the proposed Student Service Commission would be removed.

In effect, the senior positions on the council would be filled by people representing the campus as a whole. The responsibilities of the members would be the expression of the opinions of their college societies and carrying out the business of the Students Administrative Council within their own college or faculty.

We feel sure that such a measure would make the positions of not only the members of council but also those filling key posts much more significant.

Associates

It is symptomatic of the attitude of students on this campus that the Hart House Orchestra Associates are having so difficult a time interesting the student body in the forthcoming concert by the Hart House Orchestra.

When several students banded themselves together with the idea of encouraging Dr. Boyd Neel in his attempts to bring fine classical music to the campus, they undertook a very heavy financial commitment.

As it stands now, many people from off campus are vitally interested in the project, but the students and staff of the university have practically neglected it.

Purchase of a membership in the organization will not only permit you to hear a fine concert but will also be an expression of your interest in classical music and its more effective presentation on the campus.

It seems that seventy-five cents is a small price for so significant a purchase.

Student Apathy and Politics

For the past few years it has been the habit of the University of Toronto Debating Union (a sub-committee of the SAC) to neglect the clause in its constitution that declares that it will hold a Model Parliament. Instead, the Political Economy Club has undertaken the task of bringing together leaders of the political parties on campus and acting as co-ordinator in the holding of campus-wide elections and an annual two-day Model Parliament in the Ontario Legislature.

Because it was fully realized by all concerned that a Parliament could not be successful unless every party co-operated with the other and with the Political Economy Club, the warring factions came together and worked out a plan. From the point of view of the various campus politics it was a great success; each was given an opportunity to play the petty politician in the election campaign and to play campus "wheel" in the plush surroundings of the legislature. All very fine — for the interested few.

We in the Political Economy Club thought the aims of a Model Parliament should be to: 1. promote interest in national political affairs by having the various parties put forward their views and policies for examination; 2. give some students the chance to plan and execute an election campaign; 3. give the campus politicians some experience in parliamentary processes and a chance to show maturity and responsibility in their participation in a parliament; 4. promote interest in and intelligent understanding of Canadian politics by drawing spectators to the Model Parliament in session.

By AL MILLARD
President, Political Economy Club

Last year we held pre-election meetings with spokesmen for all parties present to explain their views to the inquiring student. The first meeting drew a handful of people — all but one or two were party faithfuls. The next meeting drew not one student, except the party spokesmen, (this one was held in one of the engineering buildings). The next two were equally successful in failing to interest people. Campaign posters of some parties told students to vote one way or another without attempting to appeal to the intelligent voter. The elections were marred by a least one known instance of ballot-box stuffing and by many accusations and recriminations. About 16% of the student body bothered to vote. As for maturity and responsibility, the third party to hold office (on the third sitting, held in UC's West Hall) finally had to give up and adjourn the Parliament when the clowning, heckling, booing, and ill-manners of the opposition (Tories, in this case) made speech impossible.

The actions of certain campus politicians in that sitting were disgraceful to their party and to the University. There were not more than ten spectators at the first two sittings in the Legislature; I am thankful, for the sake of campus politics, that there were none at the final one.

Some of the incidents described above should begin to indicate why the Political Economy Club felt that a change was necessary. The old system failed to realize any of the supposed purposes of a Parliament. We proposed, among other things, that the emphasis should be shifted from elections to the Parliament in such a way as to stimulate intelligent presentation of views. To this end we proposed that each major party bring down one of its big names from Ottawa for one of three nights. This well-known speaker would lead his party in an intelligent and parliamentary debate, and perhaps attract a few students to hear the proceedings.

Early last term our general plan was acceptable to the leaders of all parties. The P.C. Club then elected a new president who objected to this plan, and the Liberal Club executive later decided not to accept it. The Political Economy Club brought the party leaders together, and, after having discovered that its plan was unacceptable to the P.C.s and Liberals (the CCF hadn't made up its mind), withdrew as co-ordinating body. We had no obligation or duty to carry on a Model Parliament, particularly when it was the farce and failure that it was, and we could not hope to operate without the co-operation of all parties. We left the parties (or the UTDU) to take the initiative. None took it; there is no Model Parliament this year.

But in all fairness to the political clubs, I say that the fault is not all theirs. The apathy of the vast majority of students has been discouraging to all of them. There is no incentive to get out and capture any interest that may be drifting, unattached, around the campus. I venture to say that the Model Parliament has not been needed or missed.

Precipitated by the editorial on Brother Hoods, which appeared on February 21st.

WE BELIEVE; that the jargon and verbosity of various disciplines tends to choke the dissemination of truth and hence restrict its usefulness to those outside the discipline.

WE SUSPECT; that hesitancy to reduce communication to an understandable level on the part of these various disciplines suggests a basic inadequacy.

WE SUGGEST; that the Varsity Editor is unnecessarily verbose, and consequently obscure.

WE PROTEST; the use of this language in Varsity editorials as we believe the function of a University newspaper is to disseminate news and views intelligently.

WE BELIEVE; that this might be an attempt to stir up 'student apathy'.

WE SUBMIT; that this method is intellectually dishonest and fruitless.

WE BELIEVE; that Mr. Batten knows what he wants to say.

WE WISH; that he would say it.

WE LAMENT; an attempt on the part of the pseudo-intelligentsia, who like demagogues, try to seduce the masses by overpowering them with obscure phrases.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE; that university students express themselves in various forms of immaturity.

WE SUBMIT; that these people are intellectually a great deal more honest seeing the world through green bottles than Varsity Editors seeing the world through a dictionary.

WE SUBMIT; that the function of a university is to discover and disseminate truth, and just as this University, or various aspects of this university, fails to express intelligently its community its point of view,

CARMEN?

Carmen Jones, a Hollywood film-translation of the Bizet opera, is the best publicized movie of the year, but is not one of the more important ones. Though based on the affairs of a slut and her swains, a theme well-suited to everyone's taste, Carmen Jones is a weak translation from Bizet, at times effective and convincing, but never consistently so.

The first attempt at adapting the opera to American backgrounds was made some years ago by a Mr. Hammerstein, one of Broadway's more outstanding figures, who gave us a Carmen Jones hep to Western slang, but a perfect reproduction of her namesake in affinity for gold. In preparing this screen version the film people must have anticipated trouble with the Breen Office because they made several significant changes in the infamous Carmen character, diluting her more interesting characteristics to the point where she becomes an almost ordinary sort of gold-digger. A measure of fidelity is added to our heroine's makeup. This of course makes her a much nicer person, but nice people are dull people and so Carmen Jones is made, in parts, a dull story.

One of the biggest drawbacks of the Hollywood production is in the dubbing of voices for the principals. There is a very noticeable difference between speaking voices of Dorothy Dandridge and Harry Belafonte and their singing. Also interesting is the remarkable effortlessness of these two, as Carmen and her friend GI Joe, even when hitting their highest notes. It seems pointless for them to go through their motions when it is obvious that the sounds are coming from offstage.

Outstanding musical number in the show is the "Beat Out That Rhythm on a Drum" piece, sung by Pearl Bailey — in her own voice — featuring an excellent closeup of a dextrous drummer-boy and a whirling background of dancers, all neatly combined to interpret the song. Miss Bailey's flair for comedy, more than her voice, good as it is, makes her Carmen Jones' most effective personality.

Hard to understand is the restyling of Escamillo, originally a glamorous bull-fighter with clouds of money who lures Carmen away from her soldier Don Jose. Carmen Jones replaces this fascinating figure with a somewhat loutish prizefighter, name of Husky Miller, who is only repulsive to Miss Jones and whose attempts to woo her with gold are sneered at as she holds true to her man Joe.

Brilliant though is the colour camera as it moves about the cleverly-presented settings focussing aptly on the centres of interest. In the already-mentioned "Rhythm on a Drum" number mood is achieved by throwing the dancers in the background slightly out of focus, making the background blend into a maelstrom of colour, exciting, interesting, yet not distracting from Pearl Bailey in the centre of things.

All told Carmen is a good movie, sluggish at times, but when the acting drags there is always the colour to brighten things.

Sixty Cent Seats New Student Rate At Crest Theatre

The Crest Theatre has come up with a new plan for students without prodding from any quarter. Starting this week with Marching Song there will be a new student rate of 60 cents for rush seats at any performance. Formerly students were allowed a reduced rate for the first three nights of the second week's performance only.

Rush seats will be on sale at the box office for the hour and a half before the time of the performance. If the production is sold out there will be no rush seats at all, but when there are seats available, they will go from any price range for the same price of sixty cents. There will be six more plays at the Crest this season before it closes for the summer.

The next play is Diary of A Scoundrel, a classic Russian comedy.

20 million dollars' worth

54 DUTCHMEN

A feeling of whispered awe pervades the Art Gallery of Toronto. Stopping just short of interior decoration, the gallery has reorganized its floor plan to house the latest show Dutch Painting: The Golden Age. It's impossible to wander in without catching the feeling that something special is taking place.

The Dutch show is rather special. Work by 54 Dutch painters, some of them the best known of all the "great masters", has been assembled for display in three cities only: New York, Toledo and Toronto. The blue-uniformed Pinkerton men, armed and suspicious, who pad restlessly through the galleries, emphasize the value of the paintings worth in aggregate some 20 million dollars. The occasional humidifier dampens the air to keep the great works in the pink.

All this provides the sedately exciting atmosphere that has probably been at least half the fun for the 16,000 Torontonians who have already seen the show. It makes the job doubly difficult for the reviewer, who gradually comes to see himself as a mongrel dog yapping loudly and uneasily at the foot of some great national monument.

The Dutch painters of the "Golden Age" of the 17th century painted with meticulous craftsmanship the local landscape slightly dramatized, the ever-wealthier bourgeoisie and their utensils. Often the result is a literal report of rather static objectivity. Sometimes the technique is the means to a fuller personal statement. Sometimes the detail is without any triviality and is accomplished with a remarkable economy of means. It is then that the age is really golden, the master really great.

The show is cleverly engineered to give you the greatest opportunity to contrast, compare and perhaps to make up your own mind about what is really expressive. One gallery contains most of the large landscapes, while another juxtaposes many "Still Life's"; The "Italian School" who, inspired by Caravaggio, attempted epic biblical themes in a sculptural manner are found in a single room together. Two Hals Cavaliers stand on either side of a doorway, easily demonstrating the greater bold freedom of the non-commissioned work, "The Jolly Toper". The whole show finds a summing up in one room where two similar old ladies peer at each other across the room. Rembrandt's portrait is human and well composed, while his pupil Bol seems to have been seduced by the fun of accurately reproducing rufles.

The painters of that golden age could reproduce easily the textures of a host of objects — flowers and oranges, butterflies and snails, satins and velvets, — and lighting effects of spectacular subtlety. It is nice to think that we could reach out and touch painted objects; we are warmed by an interest in homely little details of middle class life. But there is little in these things to excite us. It is only when I came to Rembrandt and Hals that I found something that transcended photography in a sort of Shakespearean objectivity that holds within itself all the strength and the mystery of human life.

The show remains at the gallery until March 25.

the varsity chorus sings at hamilton in choral festival

Two busloads of University of Toronto Chorus rode up to Hamilton last Sunday for the seventh Annual Inter-Varsity choral festival.

Four schools participate in this Festival: McMaster, Ontario Agricultural College, Western and the University of Toronto.

Under the leadership of Dr. A. R. H. Johnston, the chorus sang Dvorak's Songs of Nature for their part of the program. Dr. Johnston also conducted the total massed choirs in three works at the end of the program.

Next year the University of Toronto will be host to the Choral Festival.

Having completed this annual event in the year's activities, the chorus is now preparing for its concert with the orchestra to be held on March 10th.

A POST-FESTIVAL LOOK

this earth is ours

The U.C. Players' Guild has once again chosen as a festival entry a play defending the individual against the march of capitalism; they have dealt with the theme with an imagination and enthusiasm which went far towards concealing the very weakness of the play itself. Director Curt Reis' production displayed thorough-going technical competence and remarkably ingenious use of the limited facilities of the Union stage; however, insufficient performances in most of the roles and a certain lack of unity in the conception of the whole left much to be desired as regards clarity and a sustained mood.

The story of Joe Stepa's fight to preserve his farm against the encroachments of a large utility corporation has a diminished interest for to-day's audiences but Stan Daniels and Sandra Collis in the leading roles created characters of sufficient strength and conviction to attract and hold the sympathies of the audience. Syd Moscoe, Morris Fine and Arthur Low were noteworthy among the supporting players for good, though limited, characterizations.

Milton Barnes' music made a significant contribution in supporting the mood and compensating for between-scenes disturbances which threatened serious distraction.

The production was far from being really satisfactory but there was considerable vigour and imagination in the treatment; besides, as we said above, the director and his cast had a considerable initial burden to struggle against in the fact that the play was such a bad one.

trinity staff play

HEART'S DESIRE

Professor Ashley's Heart's Desire was produced as the Mardi-Gras contribution of the Trinity College Staff. Playing before a packed house at Cartwright Hall, members of the faculty did an extremely creditable job with the story of assorted characters waiting "in one of the Christian sections" for the entrance into heaven.

It is both the delight and the temptation of a staff production that the audience will find almost anything hilariously funny — even the mere appearance of a professor on the stage. Prof. Ashley rose above the temptation — the dialogue was cleverly written, and there were well thought out dramatic effects; the cast rose above the 'delight', keeping magnificently in character even when the audience was most distractingly appreciative.

The characters were distinctive — from a befuddled and elegant Mrs. Panton (Mrs. C. R. Fielding), who had had her visa signed by an Archbishop, a shrewish and selfish Edith (Miss K. M. Darroch), who, having murdered her husband five years before, would not enter the gates of heaven till she found out if he knew it, a former spiritualist who now occasionally answered calls of other 'practitioners', played by Prof. Grube, the nervous effeminate Peter (Dr. G. G. Falle) the (superbly made up) controlling attendant of the gate (Prof. W. J. Ruddock, Edith's husband Harry (the Rev. W. L. Smith), in betel, shorts, and dark glasses, thoroughly enjoying his death, the voice of the spiritualist on 'earth', spoken by Miss M. E. White, the earnestly prayerful Moral Rearmament enthusiast Kenneth (Mr. J. W. Cole), and Edith's precocious son Brian (M. T. Wilson), who seemed to have intimations of immortality, or else was reincarnated and had been here before.

Only this last part did not maintain the high level of dialogue; Brian seemed continually to launch into a sermon whatever moral he could draw from the other lines. While this feared event never happened, his speeches slowed down the play and made less effective the truths that were obvious from the lighter and more amusing speeches.

CHIPS ARE DOWN FOR CAGE BLUES

Speaking of SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

This weekend the Basketball Blues can either sink or swim when they tangle with the McGill Redmen and the Queen's Gaels on the same road that stifled their bid for the Intercollegiate championship last winter. This season the Blues have their best chance in years of winning the Wilson Cup, and if they do, it will be with one of the worst clubs, team-wise, that ever graced the Hart House court.

The fact that the Blues this year are a collection of stars, mostly well-versed in the art of the cage game, gives us ample reason to suppose that they might function as a unit, and indeed if they did it is highly likely that they would walk off with the Intercollegiate laurels without any trouble. However, to date there is little evidence to support such a premiss, and as a consequence of this peculiar individuality, the Blues now rank a rather mediocre third in the league standings, and will face the two important tests this weekend minus the services of one of the best basketballers in the Intercollegiate scene.

This team, which blows hot and cold with as much regularity as a twenty-five cent alarm clock, is a team whose success or failure is apparently founded upon the court whims of several individuals, each of whom seems to be playing the game for his own enjoyment. While we believe that to win or to lose matters little in the true sense of athletic endeavor, we have always thought that team-work was the essence of good play, and this particular attribute of most winning teams is noticeably lacking on the Blues for more than three-quarters of nearly all their games.

As an example let's look at last Saturday's clash with the Assumption College Purple Raiders. Not until the final ten minutes, when the Raiders were threatening to win the game and eliminate all possibility of a championship for the Blues, did the Varsity club begin to play as a unit. At that point the heat was turned on and the Blues hammered the Purple from every conceivable direction, fighting into an eight-point lead, enough to win the game. Sheer drive and determination accomplished that task, but it would seem to us that if they had started a little bit earlier, say at the beginning, they might well have been twenty points up on the Raiders by the end.

Without appearing to blame anybody in particular, and admitting that we don't pretend to follow closely the idiosyncrasies of the cage sport, we wonder why it is that in past games the most logical point-getters — those under the hoop — are generally the lowest on the Varsity club. To this there isn't a readily available answer, other than that the inside men on this team are not being set up by the outside men. In basketball there is no credit for the playmaker; the man who gets the points is the hero, but in hockey points are awarded for assists, and it is interesting to note that in the final analysis they count as much to a player's total as a goal. Obviously the points are what count on the scoreboard, but it would seem sensible to get them in as efficient a manner as possible, and this is not shooting from the outside, or, for that matter, continually setting up one man.

McGill's potential is vested in just two men, each of whom averages close to eighteen points a game, while the rest of the team averages no better than five per man. The Redmen are sitting one from the bottom, while the Western Mustangs, where any one of five or six players is liable to be high man, are sitting on the top. The Blues, where the same three men are consistently high scorers, are perched in the middle. It is interesting to note that Mel Mickalacki, who carries the burden of the McGill scoring effort, has a rather low shooting percentage, not at all indicative of his rather large point total.

While it may not seem to be our place to criticize the manner in which a Varsity team sets out to represent the University of Toronto, we do feel that the time has come for some sort of superficial analysis when the problem becomes evident to the average onlooker. The only trouble is that the solution is not readily evident, and this largely because the fault creating it cannot be traced to any particular source. For this reason we hesitate to level a bony finger in any one direction, but the fact remains that something is wrong with the Blues. At any rate the big test will be this weekend, for against McGill they will only need the usual amount of effort, but against the Gaels they will need all the teamwork available to post a win. Western, McMaster, and Assumption have all made this trip, and not one has managed a double victory. The Mustangs came closest walloping McGill 80-56, but lost a two-point decision to Queen's the following night in Kingston. Should the Blues come back with two victories, which is not inconceivable, they will be good bets to be winners from here in, but it's going to be touch and go under the present circumstances.

From the Blue Room . . . the Hockey Blues take it easy this weekend in preparation for the league wind-up next Friday against McGill . . . The intermediate puckmen tangle with Queen's in Kingston Saturday afternoon.

Play McGill In Montreal Tonight Face Real Test Against Queen's

For the second week in a row the chips are down for the Basketball Blues, as they take on the McGill Redmen in Montreal tonight, and return to Kingston for the real test with the Queen's Golden Gaels Saturday. Still smouldering in the middle of the league standings, the Blues will have to win at least one of these two tilts, and a double victory will give them a stranglehold on first place, and make next Wednesday's game with the Western Mustangs a championship contest.

The Blues have yet to meet McGill this season, but will face a hungry quintet of Redmen, who have only two victories so far this year. Threats on the McGill club are Mel Mickalacki and Leon Duplessis, each of whom has a league average close to eighteen points a game. Mickalacki was the big gun that sank the Blues last season, but it is unlikely that there will be any trouble from the Montreal school this weekend.

Queen's, on the other hand, are sure to give the Blues a run for their money before bowing-out. High-scoring centre Paul Fedor leads the Gael quintet, and has an average of twenty points this season. Bob Purcell is another man who could be a thorn in the Blue side, as he was when the two clubs met in Hart House three weeks ago.

In that game the Varsity crew edged the Gaels 71-63, and had a hard time doing it. Last Friday night the Gaels slipped by Western 67-65, handed the Mustangs their first loss of the season, and earlier in the year they dumped Assumption. It only shows that the Tricolor are strongest on their home court, and that the Blues will have to be at their best to post a win.

PHE Tops UC Wins Vol'ball

The gals of P.H.E. took the intramural volleyball crown for the second year in succession, last night, shading U.C. Jr. - Sr. by a 38-35 score.

The final outcome of the game was always in doubt and the lead see-sawed back and forth on practically every serve. The first half was featured by fine serving by both teams; Grace Robinson led the way for P.H.E. with five points, followed by Dot Hudson with four. U.C.'s attack was headed by Lorraine Rotman, Helena Wiseman, and Joan de Laplante. The half-way mark saw P.H.E. with a slim 19-17 lead.

In the second half, the Red and White forged ahead with Lorraine Rotman and Bev Brown spearheading a U.C. drive which accounted for thirteen big points. The determined Phys. Ed. squad fought back, however, and kept within striking distance of the lead. Noreen Maniscola gave the victors their winning points in the final two minutes of play.

UC Captures Playoff Berth Jr. Vic Defeats Pre-Meds

In interfac. hockey action during the past week, there were only two games of any importance. St. Mike's C team defeated Dents' C team 3-1 to win their group. It was a rugged affair with many penalties being assessed to both teams. Tait, McKinnon and Vojtech scored for the Irish while Dale scored for Dents.

In the only group playoff this year, U.C. III defeated SPS VI by the score of 9-0. The Skulemen tried hard to win the game and the first period ended with U.C. ahead 2-0 on a two goal effort by S. Passmore. The second period was a completely different affair as the U.C. team took control scoring at will. Green scored two goals while L. Scott, Wansborough, K. Black, Jeans and Dysart each scored one apiece. The U.C. team now meets St. Mike's B's in the semi-final.

Jr. Vic defeated Pre-Med 3-1 as Newman scored twice for the winners. Brewer also scored for Vic while Paul scored for the Pre-Meds.

Wycliffe blanked Knox 4-0 as Leach scored twice while Adams and Patterson netted singles.

Emmanuel swamped Forestry B's 9-1. Strapp was the big gun for the Emmanuel team as he tallied three times. Davies and Cooke countered for two goals apiece. Kirkwood and Cunningham added the singles. Richards saved the Lumbermen from being shut out.

U.C. III whitewashed Med IV 8-0 to cause a deadlock for first place in their group which as we've said at the beginning was won yesterday by the U.C. team. Passmore, Green and Dysart scored twice each for the winners. Scott and Wansborough added the singles.

There were two defaults this week. Dent B, defaulted to Med III and Trinity C defaulted to SPS VI.

Bronze Baby at Stake

This week-end the Bronze Baby, emblematic of supremacy in women's intercollegiate basketball will travel from Falconer Hall where it has been housed for the last two years to Thames Hall in London. Of course we hope that the trip will be an unnecessary one and that it will be travelling back again with the team on Sunday, but Western, McGill, and Queen's have different ideas.

With the exception of 1952 when Queen's won the championship, Toronto has come out on top each year since 1949. Now that is the sort of rut that it's nice to get into and we would like to make the basketball championship an annual habit with Toronto. Western will from all reports provide the toughest opposition as was the case last year. And if they play basketball like they play volleyball they should have no trouble; however we have hopes that they aren't that versatile.

Jane Duff, June Hansford, Pam Miles, Mary Winslip, Lou Martin and Sally Wallace are back from last year's team; so if experience means anything Toronto should fare pretty well. And if height means anything we have Sue McLaughlin who stands about five feet ten. Claire McMullen, Gwen Anne Miller, Pat Davis and Audrey Lamb are new faces on the team, but are old hands at the court game.

The Toronto team has won all its games so far this year and most of these wins have been by wide margins. But they have not encountered the competition that they will have this week-end, and therefore it's difficult to foresee the outcome of the tournament. In spite of this we somehow think that they'll do even better with better opposition and bring the Bronze Baby back to Toronto where it belongs.

Intercollegiate Swim Meet Here Wrestling, Squash Out of Town

Hart House will be the scene Saturday afternoon for the Senior Intercollegiate swimming championships, in which teams from McGill, Western, and Toronto will compete. Also to be held are the Intermediate championships, where Western, Toronto, and McMaster are represented. The meet will begin at 2:00 P.M. with the senior competition, and since this is one of those Intercollegiate events that only appear on this campus once every three or four years, it will be worth your while to take a look.

Toronto coach Cressy McCarty has an impressive list of swimmers representing the University this year, with Bill McGillroy, a former Canadian Junior record holder in the backstroke, and Bibi Stipetic, who represented Yugoslavia at the 1948 Olympics in the 1,500 metres.

John Bate, Harvey Doherty, and George Stulac have all seen Intercollegiate competition before, and will be back to aid the Blues in their quest for the title, won last season by McGill.

Stulac was holder of two records in free style events two years ago, but these were broken by McGill's Dave Hedberg last winter. Hedberg, however, will not be swimming for the Redmen this year, and there is a good possibility that George can win both the 50 and 100 yard events for Toronto.

Top performers for Western will be Bob Easun in the 440, and Bob Eyon in the 150 individual medley. McGill will miss Hedberg, but will be aided by Lloyd Kishino who won the 200 backstroke title last winter.

This weekend the Intercollegiate wrestling championships are being held at OAC, and the University will be represented by two strong teams in the Senior and Intermediate classes.

Medics Edge Trinity 45-41 Led by Ralph Hull with 17

Yesterday afternoon an inspired Pre-Med basketball team came from behind, dissolving a ten point deficit and scored a 45-41 victory over Trinity A. Trinity held a large 34-24 lead at the end of the second period and it seemed that the Meds would not overcome it. After three minutes of play in the third portion of the game, however, Meds staged an aggressive down-court press that enabled them to steal the ball frequently and break quickly. High men for Pre-Meds were Ralph Hull with 17 and Larry Joyn with twelve. For Trinity high men were Breck Milton with 20 and Dave Moore with eight.

In basketball action Wednesday Junior SPS rolled over Dent A 61-31. Bill Karpinski with thirteen points made one of his best showings of the year as he displayed perfect finger-tip control, tipping in three baskets and almost tipping in a few others. Other high men for Skule were Bill Fraser with thirteen also and Hank Galka with ten. Dave Lampert led Dents with eight. Jerry Gray and Bill Janvary were close behind with six each.

Other action on Wednesday saw St. Mike's B as victors over Senior Vic 50-36. Roy McDermott was St. Mike's high man scoring 16 points and John Robinson of the same team hooped twelve. Senior Vic's high men were Manny Radomski and Ray Atkin with ten and eight respectively.

Coming to life in the last period Pharmacy edged Knox A, 47-46. Jack Bloomberg of Pharmacy outscored everyone with 19 points. Trevor Boyes was Knox's top man with 17.

Compliments from Varsity

Editor, Journal:

Oh you lucky Queen's people! I spent 24 hours on your campus last Wednesday and Thursday and I don't think I ever enjoyed visiting any university more.

Of course, the long-established tradition of Queen's hospitality was quite evident. But other things were very noticeable too. They can be all condensed into one word, "spirit". This was more noticeable to me, because if Toronto lacks any one thing, it's spirit.

Of course Toronto puts on a good show, but it's only a victory in numbers. We have about 8,000 more students this year than Queen's.

I came away from your pleasant university with many new revelations to consider. Aside from having two kinds of limestone, better facilities for your science students, a pretty terrific Students' Union where I had the pleasure of staying, lots of pretty girls, and a very picturesque campus, you have a wonderful college air about you.

It almost seemed that Kingston was there by the good graces of the university. This is a strange contrast to Toronto where you fully expect to see the campus swallowed up by the surrounding tall buildings and completely run over with street cars.

Now I'm not complaining about Toronto. That would be very disloyal because we have many good features too. I'm merely telling you how fortunate you are to have a university like Queen's.

I would like to thank you for extending your Queen's hospitality. I shall remember this visit for a long time.

By the way, I think the Golden Gaels were robbed too.

Acadia The original Don Cossack chorus and Dancers, currently on their 24th tour of the U.S. and Canada are due to appear here this week.

The chorus originated in 1920 in an army camp near Constantinople. Serge Jaroff, then a Russian officer chose 32 of the most impressive voices in the camp and welded them into an ensemble. After the war they became the choir in the Orthodox Cathedral at St. Sophia. In 1936 the whole troupe became U.S. citizens.

UBC A rebellious second-year architecture class staged a sit-down strike Thursday and refused to attend a physics lab.

The students contended that the labs were badly co-ordinated with the lecture material in the compulsory physics course.

"We didn't find out all about a month later just what was coming off," said a spokesman for the group.

Director of the department,

Professor Lasserre, said that he had not been notified of the situation, but admitted that complaints had reached his ears in the past.

The Provincial Government announced that the first reading of a bill to provide $2,000,000 for UBC expansion had gone through the House. At the same time it announced that $2,000,000 is to be made available for development of the University endowment lands.

DIALOGUE

By Michael Nimchuk

The negress walked towards Alec Graham's table and sat down beside him.

"Look," she said, "I want to go out with you but I just can't."

"I don't see why not," he said. "You said you'd go just a while ago."

"I've changed my mind."

"You've got no right to change your mind. I've already phoned Omar's to save us a table."

"Look, I told you I can't go with you. Get somebody else."

"I don't want anybody else." "Don't be silly. I'll bring over Danielle. She's French."

"Leave her there. I said I don't want anybody else."

"Ah, I can't argue with you all night. I've got to change."

"Go ahead and change. I'll wait."

"All right. All right. Wait if you want. But you're wasting your time."

"I've got lots of time."

She walked back to the stage-door behind the platform where the orchestra played. The negro bassist looked up from his strings and stared at the brown, sleek girl weaving between the tables towards him. Before she went into the dressing room he said something to her. The negress just made a gesture, then went through the door.

Alec watched her move away from his table. A lot of other people were also watching. Some were making remarks. A few people smiled, some looked envious and hungry.

Alec looked slowly around the room, met each pair of staring eyes, and, in silent combat defeated them with his blue intensity. Only a woman, bored with her husband's smutty jokes to his sales-manager met and caressed Alec's steady gaze with a compassion that balanced the antagonism of the mob.

The yellow spotlight came up and filled the dim, smoke filled cave with a thick murky glow. A slick, black-haired M.C. shuffled casually onto the small, cleared dance floor. Beneath his trim black moustache a broad grin was spreading like molasses.

"Well, how do you do, how you do, you happy, lucky late drinking people! Tonight we have a great show lined up for the patrons of the Club St. Angele. With us tonight is some of the finest artists that ever appeared before an audience . . ." The M.C. drifted through his spiel with the easy assurance of a used car salesman. With a fanfare, the orchestra and the M.C. brought on the first act, a group of acrobats who flipped and balanced to the "Ohs" and "Ahs" of an audience expanding with the easy mood of the exciting entertainment.

Alec, eyes downcast, sat stiffly at his table, making rings on its metal top with the bottom of his wet glass. The negress had not come on yet. She was the star of this week's show. Once in a while he would eye the three bronze beauties who were now putting on a very fast and furious bit of stripping. His thoughts drifted with his eyes for a moment but returned ruttishly to the production of

Cagemen Slaughter McGill Edged By Queen's 69-61

By MAX ROSENTHAL

The Varsity Blue basketball team travelled to Kingston and Montreal last weekend with the hope of winning the two games that would seat them on top of the Intercollegiate league. In Montreal Friday the Blues easily defeated the McGill Redmen, 77-47, but in Kingston the next night the Blues were dumped by the Queen's Gaels, 69-61.

The Blues' chances of winning the Wilson Cup, however, were not completely extinguished. A Varsity win over Western at Hart House tomorrow night and over McGill Saturday accompanied by an Assumption split with Western in their two games next week would send the Blues into a three way tie for first place with Queen's and Western with seven wins and three losses each. A play-off, such as occurred in the football season would be highly unlikely.

With eight minutes remaining in the Queen's game the score was 51-51. The previous 32 minutes had seen both teams playing equally well, checking aggressively and scoring a good number of their shots.

Al Vaichulis had incurred four fouls in an outstanding attempt to check Paul Fedor, the Gaels' prolific scoring centre. But Fedor, who had scored two field goals previously, sank two uncheckable fade-away jumping one-hand sets shots to give the Gaels a 55-51 lead.

Vaichulis then fouled out. His replacement Vic Kurdyak, fouled out with five minutes to play. The Gaels sank three more set shots and increased their lead to an unsurmountable 61-51 before the Blues could score a basket.

High man of the night with 25 points was Fedor whose ability to shoot and score from anywhere within fifteen feet of the basket made him a constant threat.

Sinking layups in his own inimitable pleasing fashion was Don Fawcett, the Blues high scorer with 21.

The Blues led for most of the first half but the Gaels scored a few baskets in the dying moments to tie the score, 35-35.

In the last half of the second half, however, the Blues' retaliation failed mainly because there was no one tall enough to check Fedor and Jay McMahon, a former Penn State star, who scored twelve. Art Binnington who had checked and effectively boxed out McMahon earlier in the game was seated on the bench towards the end with four fouls.

Other high scorers were Leo Madden of the Blues and Bob Purcell of Queen's with ten each.

On Friday night the Blues had no trouble with the McGill Redmen. High men for the Blues were Don Fawcett with eighteen and Art Binnington with eleven. Leon Duplessis and Mel Mikalachki were McGill's best with 19 and 11 respectively.

There will be a meeting of all members of The Varsity Masthead this afternoon at 5:00 p.m. in the office. All members are requested to be present.

Students Practice Drinking "Until They Could Not Sit Up"

About fifty students from the University of Toronto are among those taking part in drinking tests for the Ontario Government, recently reported Dr. Ferguson, head of the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Toronto.

The object of the tests is to experiment with the breathalyzer, the successor to the Drunkometer, the Intoximeter, and the Alcometer. By means of the new instrument, it is hoped, every cop "will be an expert" on drunk cases.

That engineering students aren't the strong drinkers they boasted they were, was one of the incidental pieces of information learned from the tests. About 100 self-styled "hardy drinkers" were put through their drinking paces at the nightly cocktail parties; some consumed from 10 to 16 ounces of liquor, Dr. Ferguson reported. He said that a lot of "romantic delusions" some drinkers held about their capacities were shattered.

The researchers reported that of all their volunteers, only two proved in any way obstreperous. Two more got cold feet and stopped drinking after the first highball or so.

Food, soda water, and ginger ale went along with the drinks. Chess games, poker, music, all were encouraged to make the drinker feel as comfortable as if he were drinking in his home.

It was noted that "very few" could get their blood content up above a figure of 1.5 parts per 1,000. "Many tried resolutely over a period of two hours until they could no longer sit up." It took from 10 to 16 ounces of whiskey to reach this condition, Dr. Ferguson reported.

Professor Frank H. Underhill, of the Department of History will speak on "Canadian-U.S. Foreign Relations", today, at four p.m. in Falconer Hall. He will speak at an open meeting of the International Relations Club. Refreshments will be served.

SHARE "Sneaks Up" on $5000 Forestry and Emmanuel Lead

"Money. turned in by the SHARE canvassers amounts to about $3,166," announced the returning officer, Bill Crossin, last night. The results, he said, are not yet complete. "The way it looks at present, we'll sneak up on $5,000 as the final total, plus seven or eight hundred dollars from parking cars at the football games."

The first two faculties to go over their quotas were Forestry and Emmanuel, announced Crossin. He added that "up to the present time, Dents, Meds, Knox, and St. Mike's are behind in the results."

Crossin emphasized that it was imperative for the results to come in as quickly as possible. To help the canvassers, he suggested that those who have not yet contributed to SHARE should make a point of finding their canvasser.

U. of T. Student To Go To Japan On WUS Scholarships Plan

An opening has been provided for a University of Toronto student to study in Japan for one year. Although final details have not yet been completed, there is good possibility that there will be places where English speaking students could study, a spokesman stated.

Applications for the scholarship, which are now open, should state the name, address, telephone number and the course of the applicant. In addition, the past scholastic standing, university activities, and the reasons for desiring to go to Japan to study should be given. The scholarship will not be granted on academic requirements only, but all aspects of the student's interests will be considered, the spokesman emphasized. If there is any preference in choice of university in Japan, this should be also stated, although only certain places are open because of the language barrier.

Applications should be handed in at the SAC office by March 15. A final decision will be reached shortly thereafter, and details will be completed. This project is sponsored by the World University Service committee on the campus, and is made possible by contributions to SHARE, stated the Scholarship spokesman.

Apply Now For Scholarships For Couchiching Conference

Six scholarships for this summer's Couchiching conference are open to Canadian University students, a World University Service spokesman announced yesterday. Application forms are now available in the Students' Administrative Council office to anyone interested.

The conference will be held from August 13-20, in Geneva Park, Lake Couchiching. It is sponsored by the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs and the CBC. The topic of discussion will be Public Affairs in Canada.

The scholarship will give the student winning it $50. This will cover registration fees and accommodation. The student will be expected to pay his or her transportation fees.

The deadline for applications is March 15. All applications will be received in the SAC office.

the lives and loves of devonshire place

By William Harris

A loaf of bread
Beneath the bed
A pint of beer —
And you, my dear,
Will very soon
Be in my room.

The column was one of the many which dropped vertically to the pavement, throwing black shadows into the darkened corridor beneath the stadium. They huddled closely to this shaft of darkness, away from the probing eyes of the moon, whose beams struck green gothic turrets, and rebounded along the skyline to stone towers and slate roofs until they fell peacefully through bare elm branches to the pavement.

She wore her hair short and brushed back, save for a small curl on her forehead, which, he was sure, she had left there only to tease him. Her eyes gazed up at him from the night, holding his own, inviting, challenging, flirting with his until stop sign to another. This short block, however, harbours more love and excitement than any other block in Ontario.

From its lower end a student can see the gilded clock of the University Memorial Tower, the chimneys of Hart House, the grey, sooted stones and cisters of University College: monuments to intellectual achievement, to the serious and inquiring mind. Here also are the university playing fields, balanced beside these edifices of intellect to demonstrate that man cannot live by brain alone.

From its northern terminus Devonshire Place looks down Bloor Street at the lights of the "Chez Paree", "King Cole" and "Plaza" Rooms, playing fields of the nocturnal prowler, dedicated to gaiety and relaxation, monuments to a distiller's achievement, ninety-percent proof that man cannot live for work alone.

There are no homes, offices, and people — thousands of people: people dressed in great coats fitted with flat bottles, men and women with toques and straw hats. For Devonshire Place is also home of Varsity Stadium, centre of Canadian football, home of the Argos, the Varsity Blues and the Grey Cup classic.

On Saturday afternoons the seems the most pressing of problems . . . wondering how, and who, and when. In the end they talk of love, of girls they have met, of interesting people they have seen.

They seem to lose their morals. Actually they are beginning to adopt a new set of standards. It is no longer improper to enter a boy's bedroom for the bedroom has become the living-

Friends are entertained with no fear of reproach from the older members of the university. Suddenly they discover that they have become the arbiters of their own moral standards, that this gathering of friends and comrades will be their only judge.

Good fellowship and good brew pass freely through the gathering. They stop to refresh two couples on the corner cricket-field who are enjoying a lively discussion on just why a fellow takes a girl out. The full student insists that it must be for future marriage, companionship, or sex. The other couple appears to agree, and these three are enjoying themselves shocking and convincing the fourth member of the group, who obviously hasn't given the matter much thought until this evening. The three will spend the rest of the evening trying to shock each other with their radical ideas and new moral students share their street with all Canada. They join in with the noise, the thrills and the crowd. They feel happy and elated with the winners, sad with the losers.

But when the shouting and the noise cease, the street is again left to the students.

From all the towns of Ontario they have come to be educated. They have come from towns like Stratford and Oshawa, from Clappison's Corners and Orillia, from the gold towns of the north, from Geraldton and Cobalt. They arrive by train from Sioux Lookout and Capreol, by boat and plane from the Lakehead: young men and women away from the land of the evergreen for the first time. They have lived in lumber camps and on farms, in bungalows and mansions. They have gone to a one room schoolhouse, or have attended fashionable private schools. To Devonshire Place come the young people from all over Ontario, the open prairie and broken ocean coasts.

They have brought with them their hopes and dreams of a better life, the pride of their parents and teachers, the fond memories of friendly faces and high-school love.

Suddenly they find themselves on their own for the first time. They discover the joys of independence, the thrill of doing exactly what you wish to do. They take their first drink, or indulge in their first "open drink". Melancholy Sunday comes abruptly after exciting parties, gay dances and many new faces, finding them alone and slightly homesick. Some can go home, but mostly they do not unless in need of money or the understanding of a friend.

They learn to think and to question their parents' beliefs. They sit together in bull sessions, talking of what seemed unimportant before, but now economy: a day's wages

Painstakingly with delicate care
An aged man carved this statue
In India one day.

Carefully he etched the eyelids,
Nicked out the fingers,
Parted the toes,
Gave the round face a smile.
Quietly he turned the hardwood
Into a human being.

Beating a hammer upon a cold steel drum
Four times his height,
A British monger bashed and drilled his way
Through eight pages of blueprints
Until the hydro tube stood still, round and black Ready to be crated for the shipyards.

he was forced to diverse his glance to the smooth lines of her partly opened, moistened lips.

Some girls seem made for the evening, for the softness of midnight, the enchantment of darkness. This, he felt, was definitely one of those women. Running his hands down her soft arms, he drew her slowly towards him until all was enveloped in the flurry of the moment.

Clicking heels sounded sharply behind him. Startled, they fell apart to watch their intruder pass by. Glancing at her again, he saw that the warmth had gone from her eyes.

"It's one-thirty."

She spoke these words slowly, regretfully. Her hands lay lightly in his, a little moist now. She gave his fingers a tender squeeze. Then they turned away from the friendly shadows and crossed Devonshire Place to the lighted doorway of a girl's college.

All Lies

Today, The Varsity publishes its annual Literary Issue. We wish that we could say that we had found ourselves swamped with entries of high calibre. We wish that we could state that reading these entries has been a pleasure.

We also wish that we could say that these entries have reflected in the main the vitality and spirit of college life, and showed the degree of technical excellence that one would expect of college students.

However, if we did say any of these things, we would be lying.

judge's comment

This year The Varsity Literary Issue was judged by senior Varsity masthead members. It is a precedent, and not an entirely desirable one, therefore we offer our comments not as judges from above, but as people accustomed to read.

The best works submitted were in the short story and light verse sections. There were several stories thoughtfully presented which had good dialogue and moved along fairly compellingly. Others had paid too little attention to construction and had laboured a point instead of presenting it with the greatest economy and punch. The first prize goes to Michael Nimchuk and second to Harry Arthurs with honourable mention to Don Warnica.

Don Warnica also took first prize in the light verse for his Don Quixote and honourable mentions for his two other poems. We felt that he achieved admirably a quickness and playfully twisted use of words. Second prize went to Alex Gigeroff and honourable mention to Hugh McKellar.

The essays were mostly thin and weak. They smacked too much of the class room and too little of creative invention. The essay form wanted to be taken advantage of and she was left, unfulfilled. The only essay to receive any award was that of William Harris.

There was a large amount of serious verse submitted, but our choice was not difficult. Some used traditional forms and brought little depth or originality to them, others experimented without succeeding in justifying their innovations. First prize is awarded to Mike Nimchuk for Economy; A Day's Wage and second prize is divided between No Rose and Time (written by a man whose signature we could not make out past his initials).

The Lives and Loves

standards, so the fellowship and a lot less beer will pass on to the couple in the big chair.

She is a stewardess and he a fourth year student. They seem above this conversational fugue, for she gazes intently at him while he sits with eyes half-closed and the traces of a grin on his mouth, talking of Brubeck and Gleason, of counterpoint and "cool sticks", all the while barely managing to keep himself down to cloud level. They lean forward to sip their drinks, then once more seek love's protecting fog.

The brew is passed to the couples sitting crowded together on the bed, physically so close, yet each couple unaware of the other. The girls are from Devonshire Place, so both couples find this quiet party a solution to the strains and tensions developed behind stadium columns and in lighted doorways. For though the girls of Devonshire Place seem to lead a life of ease, they are mostly frustrated and sexually immature — victims of the disappointed matrons of a conservative university, who must believe that student love is not one of life's serious pursuits and rates, therefore, no consideration from the architects and builders of girls' residences.

Neither of these couples has time for refreshments, and so the bottle is passed to a couple sitting on the floor. He refuses the drink, but she will ask for it "straight". He is a farm boy with an outward appearance of sincerity and honesty. She is a big city girl with big ideas, a slight glaze in her eyes and a low cut to her dress. His conversation is spasmodic — a notable achievement in view of her endless conversation. Neither yet realizes that they both have come to the party for the same reason, but this they will soon discover, and then disappear to a quieter room.

The refreshment pauses with the Foxgaster and the psychiatrist's daughter, then passes to the engineer with a nurse, on a blind date. Here the beer is finally consumed through sheer necessity.

In the early morning when the last students have tumbled off streetcar and bus, there will be post-mortems over nightcaps. There will be talk of new love, of rings, of pins and of oobies. Rash promises of blind dates, marriage and co-eds will blurt from tired mouths, only to be followed by laughs and good-natured digging.

It is then that they all realize how full of gaiety, excitement, romance and spirit are their lives at Devonshire Place, how fine it is to have good friends, true love and a private room.

SECOND PRIZE SHORT STORY

did He who made the lamb make thee?

By Harry Arthurs

(Due to limitations of space, only excerpts from this story could be printed)

The music blares forth, a synopacted requiem to a dead generation. Bodies sway in an ecstatic worship of an all-powerful God. Unburdened by conscience, unfettered by thought, uninhibited by ethics, two dozen young minds make molehills of mountains and consign to the devil the hindmost in their race for oblivion. And there he stands. The hindmost.

Charcoal grey looks good on Harvey. His date certainly won't be the queen of the fraternity ball — she was only a third choice — but she's cute and she's fun. "Let's dance, doll" — and they do. He holds her closely and whispers against her sliken hair, and he is content — at peace with his world. In the next room a piano tinkles, and voices, too, sing a hymn to Love. One last dance. The lights go on. Tired couples yawn, and smile, and stretch. The ride across the black city is warm and thrilling, and as they round the last corner, anticipation mounts.

An age later the city is still black — though streaked with grey now, like the declining age of man — but the warmth is gone, and even the afterglow gives way to chill. The chill fades in its turn beneath the familiarity of his mother's kitchen. The charcoal grey is hung with care. And warm blankets stifle all sensation.

Harvey lies in a stupor, exhausted from lack of sleep, exhausted from the effort to maintain his social grace, exhausted from the attempt to relax. When, in the morning, a bright sun rises and a Perfect Day for a Ball Game dawns, then Harvey arises. Two meals stand between him and the game. He eats automatically, without enthusiasm, first breakfast then — after his routine abortive attempts at uninhibited do-nothingness — lunch. A horn, brash and cold, announces the arrival of The Boys. He has a lot in common with them. Herb and Jerry are his fraternity brothers. They go to class together. They leer at girls together. Many times they've double-dated and loved, together, bragged together, mourned in unison many setbacks, rejoiced in comradeship for each other's good fortune. But Harvey can't, try as he might, talk their language. Is this weekend's date a ball, end-all? Will life begin if he goes dancing? Will it end if they see a movie instead? And if his world rains down about him, will it be more than a drop in man's sea of sorrows?

Harvey knows himself. He's a hypocrite and a coward. This he knows. And yet he feels that he has searched the soul of mankind and found it rotten. In the bittersweet cynicism of his nineteen conceited years, he has come to grips with society. He has been to the synagogue and watched men mouth meaningless messages to a God whose existence — if they considered it at all — is either problematical or accepted in a blind passion of prejudice. He has seen men, "great" men with messages, "great" messages, who have never meant a single syllable of a single speech. He has watched while, without a saving grace of mercy or morality, man milked man and squeezed him dry. And he was a coward.

The horn — still brash, still cold — brings him from his reverie. No more is he a tiger in the forests of the night screaming defiance at society. He is once again a college student, fraternity man, a pair of faded blue denims which connect white bucks to a crew cut. He is a nervous smile, an introverted point of view, a hyper-sensitive nature. He sings and smiles and shouts and curses and cries and runs the whole gamut of emotions like a character manipulated by a Greek tragedian. Anonymity is his cross, and he bears it proudly. Life is so easy. When the others laugh, he laughs. And when they cry, he is consumed with anguish. And when they say nothing, no one is quieter than he. His is a shadow of a life.

A second can be an eternity, an eternity to a second. For Harvey, a blissful forever was to last almost a week. Thursday was a happy day. Every Thursday, Philosophy 2a would seize him. It would insinuate itself into every fibre of his soul. It would manipulate his mind and spirit. When the lecture ended he could relax — exhausted but refreshed — and usually for a few hours afterwards he would be the tiger. It was the Thursday

Pour the blood gently

By Don Warnica

She opened the door and stood leaning against it. Light from the inner room outlined every curve of her body. She was five feet five of undulating black velvet and you could tell she was no good.

"Are you sleepy, Mike?" she murmured.
"No," he said fingering his revolver.

"Good! Let's go to bed."
Mike Hammer's face froze into an ashen mask of hate. He got real mad and hit her across the jaw with a fire extinguisher. While looking for something with which to wipe up the blood, he noticed a body under the lid of the grand piano. Mike got real mad again. He strode over to the woman and put his face close to hers.

"Look, Baby, you'd better stop playing games. I want a clean America, pure for clean Americans, where good, clean American kids can live without fear of punishment or torture. You're going to talk, or I'll force a pencil up under your fingernails. Who killed this man?"

"I think..." But the shock had been too much for the woman. The upper part of her dress was completely torn away and there were several cuts on her face and arms. She fainted but Mike quickly revived her with a blow from his open fist. (You could tell she was no good.)

"I think," she continued, as soon as she could speak, "that this morning he didn't wear his rubbers to the office and I'm sure he caught his death of cold."

Her face slumped on her chest. Mike kicked the body over beside the first and picked up the phone. Another case had been solved.

KING LEAR

I have never seen a show containing at once so many good things and so many bad as the current production of King Lear at Hart House. While the frequency with which it descends from the sublime to the ridiculous robs it of unity and impact, this is a thoughtful attempt to produce a very difficult play, and since because of this same difficulty King Lear is all too rarely seen, the proffered opportunity should be seized.

Director Robert Gill has developed a technique for producing Shakespeare which makes full use of the material at his disposal and does much to conceal its short comings. With striking and original sets, ingenious lighting (which in this particular production was disappointing in that it frequently left the players in murky twilight), elaborately thought-out blocking and lavish use of colour, Mr. Gill achieves a series of tableaux and graceful interweavings of movement and colour which play up visual impression to compensate for the often insufficient effect of sound, for untrained actors have vast difficulty in speaking verse with beauty, expression and comfort all at once.

There are too many sticky points in King Lear, however, to be overcome by any but very competent and experienced actors, even though Marion Walker's rich and interesting costumes fill the stage with brilliance and Mr. Gill's blocking achieves moments of such pure theatricality (notably the final tableau) that I was really thrilled. At this point I might say that Milton Barnes' music, like the rest of the production, was remarkable for its unevenness; at times it caught the desired mood wonderfully well, but at other times it was merely distracting.

Chief among the good things in the production was John Saxton's Lear. Mr. Saxton had no need of squeaks and quavers in his voice, nor of artificial hobblings and stoopings; his age and infirmity, as well as his strength and dignity, were far more than make-up deep. Also very good was Rex Southgate as the Earl of Gloucester, in an understanding portrayal supported by considerable competence. John Douglas gave an excellent performance as the brusque and heartless Duke of Cornwall and Charles Hayter's Kent was a refreshingly gruff and simple characterization. Perhaps the most interesting performance of the evening was Powell Jones as the Fool; it is more difficult than one might suppose to fool with conviction, and while Mr. Powell's graceful antics were sometimes unsuccessful, he very, very nearly achieved what he was attempting.

The Marriage of Figaro

The Marriage of Figaro as performed at the Royal Alexandra last Saturday is so good that it seems incredible. The sets can most kindly be described as very bad. The staging, surprisingly enough, is often static. BUT, this is the finest Figaro I have heard in years — and that includes this winter's shoddy Met broadcast. The cast was so uniformly excellent that I scarcely know where to begin my praises.

Mary Morrison, whose Mozart performances have always had true elegance and grace of style, surpassed even her own high standard as the Countess. She combined the mischievous glint and youthfulness of Rosina with a quiet dignity that made her wholly sympathetic. The lovely, but tremendously difficult cavatina which opens the second act was delivered with such long unbroken phrases and even scale passages that it seemed deceptively simple. I can still hear the shimmering beauty of Miss Morrison's piano tones in the recapitulation of her second great aria.

Second only to Miss Morrison's superb portrayal was that of Marjorie Hays as Cherubino. The page's role is one of those happy parts that usually steal the show; but Miss Hays brought more than the role's intrinsic charm onto the stage. She was full of boyish exuberance tempered with an easy grace. Her voice is rich and full and she delivered her two arias with vitality and style.

Jan Rubes, well-known for his fine bass voice, acting ability and electrifying stage presence, brought all these attributes to his ebullient portrayal of Figaro.

Roma Butler's saucy Susanna just missed reaching the standard of the three artists I have mentioned. She sang and acted very well at all times. Her fourth act aria with its difficult, abrupt changes in vocal ranges was particularly effective. Still, her voice lacks the soft sheen Susanna should have, and she has not yet mastered Mozart style.

Andrew MacMillan, competent as always was a believable, almost sympathetic Count. Don Garrard did his best with Dr. Bartolo, although I thought him miscast. Mr. Garrard used to have a rich baritone voice, but since he has unaccountably decided to become a bass, the voice has lost its forward resonance, its easy delivery and its power. Milla Andrew, Karl Norman, Ernest Adams and Bernard Turgeon were all excellent comic figures — Marcellina, Basilio, Curzio and Antonio respectively and Jean Edwards rounded out the cast as Barbarina.

Mr. Torel's staging stayed pretty well within the bounds of score indications and theatrical tradition. Two imaginative Torel touches were the amusing first act finale and the effective opening of Act II, which accentuated the Countess's loneliness by placing her far upstage on a balcony.

But the honours of the production go to the musical side. The individual soloists were first-rate. The ensembles including the intricate Act II septet were well-balanced and precise. The orchestra played extremely well at all times. Mr. Goldschmidt's tempi were always exactly right and the music never touched ground. All this adds up to the greatest tribute I can bestow — it was Mozart as it should be.

The Insurrection of Don Quixote

(A poem in which nearly everyone is revolting.)

Our free land gave us heroes
And made them brave and tall,
But the modern Don Quixote
Was the greatest gift of all.

Don wasn't rosy-fingered,
His forehead auburn, instead,
Was to purify our country
From any shade of red.

One evening he was walking
By an old abandoned mill
Which the sun had coloured crimson
As it set behind the hill.

Sensing this new danger,
Don called his men nearby
And they scrubbed and washed the windmill
While smearing it with lye.

Though this work did not remove
Those reflected crimson tints,
It let Don come up like thunder,
And he's seen reigning ever since.

before the Homecoming Game, and the Fraternity had called a special meeting to discuss plans for the big party scheduled for that weekend. After supper, Harvey picked up Herb and Jerry. He drove carefully, recognizing his pre-occupation with his own world where he had withdrawn to escape the cacophony of the city, the radio, and the strident voices of his friends on the seat beside him. As they approached the campus, the city was hidden behind the tall, quiet oaks. Someone turned off the radio, and their voices deepened, then ceased. In one brief instant, for one brief instant, they stood face to face with God, with each other, with their past, with their future. It was a quiet moment and though the tiger did not roar, he felt no need to. And then they reached the Fraternity house, and quiet was juxtaposed with the vivaciousness of our generation. He sensed that the elated mood which he had enjoyed since the afternoon's lecture was about to be destroyed. And his whole life and mind and soul rested in the balance.

As he walked behind Herb and Jerry, as they mounted the stairs, as they turned the doorknob, as they opened the door, he wished that he could rip the shirts from their backs and see if they too did not think as he thought and see as he saw. And as he burned to know this and the very words formed in his throat, he feared to find himself wrong, and the words died in his throat. Together the three of them could have braved the world, for they had been comrades, and they had given each other security and affection and sympathy and all that is required for a man to live as a social being. So often Harvey had looked with contempt into the souls of his fellows. And now, when he desperately wanted to find in them something good, he was unable even to look. And as he let them go ahead, he saw his error, cursed it, but made no effort to call them back.

There were three cement steps. A brass doorknob. A wooden door. And light flooded his forests of the night. Sound flooded his sanctuary. The tiger wrenched a strangled sob from the depths of his shrivelled being. And died. None knew him in life, and none mourned his death.

"Hey, Harv, who's the lucky girl Saturday? Are you going to drive; I can't get the car." And Harvey smiled. He settled down to the problems at hand with happy efficiency — what time to leave, whose date to pick up first? And twice a year he went to the Temple of the Lord. And he sanctified Love and Success and Fashion. And he lived happily ever after.

DIE FLEDERMAUS

The Conservatory Opera Company's Die Fledermaus, which opened the current Opera Festival last Friday night, is a good show. It moves briskly in a spirit of hilarious fun. The cast is exceptionally long on acting ability if almost uniformly short on voice.

Ernest Adams and Milla Andrew as Mr. and Mrs. Eisenstein were expert comedians. Joanne Ivey was a wonderfully bored Prince Orlofsky who nicely avoided the vocal difficulties of Chacun a Son Gout by speaking the verses. Don Garrard was a creditable Falke although his youth was against him, and Andrew MacMillan turned in his usual fine performance as Frank. Add to the above list of excellent characterizations the smaller role of Dr. Blind played by Bernard Turgeon.

Adele, the maid, was overacted and undersung by Evelyn Gould so that, instead of a pert and saucy soubrette, she became a cheap little tramp. Karl Norman's Alfred was too much of a fool even for a tenor. These latter faulty interpretations might perhaps be laid at the director's feet, although Director Torel did his usual outstanding job of keeping the action lively and yet meaningful.

The second act ballet sequence, done to the Emperor Waltz, was expertly choreographed by Celia Franca to give a feeling of spaciousness in a tiny-dancing area. Joey Harris's leaps and entrechats brought well-deserved applause.

The orchestra under Nicholas Goldschmidt was always crisp or lilting as the occasion demanded. It was the brisk pace and high spirits imposed by Messrs. Torel and Goldschmidt that kept this musical bonbon from becoming cloying even after three hours.

Rita Ubriaco

Hart House Orchestra Associates

Under the direction of Boyd Neel, the Hart House Orchestra presented another fine concert Sunday night. True, the performance had not the high polished lustre of their first production, but the overall effect was that of fine music professionally played.

The program started with Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik a favorite thumper. The familiar strains came out clear and bright and it was obvious that the orchestra's natural style fitted this piece nicely. There was a quality of effortlessness and deceptive ease in its precise interpretation. A few ragged entrances were noticeable especially in the Minuetto.

The Capriol Suite by Peter Warlock provided the high point of the evening. Neel projected an old French atmosphere into the playing which contrasted beautifully with the Mozart. Each section required a different style and the orchestra easily showed its versatility. The dynamics were especially good; but the high quality of precision mostly evident in the Tordion movement was not maintained throughout.

Benjamin Britten's Simple Symphony was performed with directness and simplicity. It would be easy in a work of this type to add extraneous subtleties at the conductor's discretion. Dr. Neel wisely avoided any such tendencies and let the innate structure of the piece come out on its own merits by accurate reading. The Playful Pizzicato was performed brilliantly with each section of the orchestra sounding like a single instrument.

The weakest choice on the program was the last offering, Serenade in E by Anton Dvorak. The first three selections admirably demonstrated the abilities of a string orchestra by providing ample contrast in figuration and intonation for instruments of different ranges. The Serenade seemed to blend the various tones instead of emphasizing them. Though well played, it lacked the vitality of the others. Also, the slight raggedness generally evident in entrances was more pronounced in the Serenade. It is too bad the concert had to end with this piece.

The Hart House Orchestra gave a thoroughly professional concert and it is hoped that they will be able to give many more next year.

VARSVITY CAPTURES SWIMMING TITLE

Varsity Gals Beaten By Western 30-26

By FLO MIDDLETON

The Bronze Baby is staying in London this year; however it was only two baskets that made the difference between this ungainly athletic effigy remaining in London or returning to its usual resting place in Falconer Hall.

On Friday evening, Varsity met McGill in the opener and Western played Queens in the second game. Although the score registered was 35-32 in Toronto's favour when the final siren went, Toronto was well ahead throughout the entire game on floor play and ball handling.

Mary Winship was the big gun for Varsity dropping a total of 14 points and was followed in the scoring honours by Sally Wallace who notched 7 points. With two minutes to go, Mary pulled Toronto out of a 1 point deficit to even the score on a foul shot. Team mate Clare McMullen added one more to give Toronto a one point lead; however, McGill was pressing and it was anyone's game at this point. Finally after several mad frantic plays, Win-ship with seconds left found the basket and gave Toronto a place in the finals Saturday.

This win would not have been possible if it had not been for the excellent guarding of June Hansford, Lou Martin and Gwen Miller and the sensational rebounding of Sue McGloughlin.

In the other game, Western was taking Queens to the cleaners especially in the second half which saw Johnny Metras' girls leap ahead from a 17-17 score at half time to take the game 49-28. Jo Castle, the screaming, leaping captain of the Western squad knicked in a total of 29 points.

In the consolation match Saturday, Queens trounced McGill 54-41.

The odds were pretty even for the Toronto-Western game in spite of UWO's showing on Friday night for Toronto's bench strength was far superior and we had a guard line that was bound to ruin the deadliness of the Western forward line; however the bookies were rather uneasy by the end of the first quarter with the score 12-6 against Varsity. By the end of the second quarter we were 7 points down.

Seemingly revived by a half time rest, Varsity forged ahead and the guard line of Audrey Lamb, Pat Davis and Pam Miles stopped Western in their tracks. Not to be outdone by the guards, Pat Swayze and Jane Duff started whooping in the baskets; so that by the end of the quarter it was 26-23. Fighting desperately for the rest of the game, the Blues tried in vain, but it was no dice. Western won 30-26.

Seniors Edge McGill Seconds Lace UWO

Sparked by a victory in the 400-yard sprint relay, the last event of the meet, the University of Toronto swimming team swept to the Intercollegiate title in Hart House Saturday afternoon. Last year's champions, McGill University, placed second with 35 points, seven behind the Blues, while the University of Western Ontario were third in the three team meet.

The Blue relay team, composed of George Stulac, Bibi Stipetic, Bill Hill, and George Caparu, started the last race with McGill holding a slim one point lead in the meet, and won the race handily to oust the defending champions. The Intermediate swimmers smothered Western 64-13 to regain the Intermediate title, lost to Western last year in London. The Intermediates took nine first places in the ten events, and nine seconds, while thoroughly swamping the Mustangs.

McGill's Lloyd Kishino sliced

2.7 seconds off the CIAU mark in the 150-yard medley, finishing 3.3 seconds ahead of Varsity's Bibi Stipetic. John Bate swam the 200-yard breaststroke in 2:41.4, using the orthodox stroke, and this may well become a CIAU record in three years. The former record was for the butterfly stroke.

George Stulac won the 50-yard free style, which Bill McIlroy placed first in the 200-yard backstroke. Only other first for Toronto was in the 300-yard medley relay.

Ice Seconds Lace Queen's In Wild Game At Kingston

By FRED GRAY

Varsity's Intermediate hockey squad finished the season in a blaze of glory by dropping the Queens icemen 7-4 down in Kingston last Saturday afternoon. The Baby Blues battled the referees, fans, and time keeper as well as the Queens team to register their triumph.

Playing their best hockey of the season the Intermediates grabbed an early lead and weathered a Queens' second period rally for the win. Doug Court opened the scoring for Varsity and Don Borthwick tallied from John Prendergast to give Toronto a two goal first period lead.

Ted Rogers added a third from Ron Bertram at 4:25 mark of the second period. Queens began to roll during this frame, notching three unanswered goals to tie the score. Tempers flared midway through the period as two of the Queens' most ardent fans appeared to be the officials.

Following the rapid pace of the first two periods, action slowed somewhat in the final frame. Varsity bounced back to tally, first by Mert Wright and then by Barry Smith unassisted, to regain the lead. Tricolour supporters went wild as the Kingston crew scored to pull within one point but pulling their goaltender, in an attempt to gain at least a tie, backfired as the Intermediates tallied twice on the open net after breaking out of their own end.

Ted Rogers was a standout with five points for a Toronto team that was flying up front and rocking them along the blue-line all afternoon. Ron Bertram was the Second's only casualty, but after a trip to hospital for repairs, returned to score the team's final goal.

Intercol Squash Won By McGill

The University of Toronto's squash team placed second to McGill in the Intercollegiate Squash Tournament held in London last weekend. The University of Western Ontario, only other entrant, finished in last place.

The Blues won five matches and lost five, while the championship McGill crew won nine and lost one. Western managed only one win in the two-day tournament.

Varsity's Phil Ketchum won two matches, while Jim McClelland, Norm Seagram, and Johnny Hague each split a pair. Doug Anderson lost both his matches. McGill, featuring several Junior players, had little trouble breezing to their second title in two years, losing only one match when Ketchum defeated Mike Brodeur. Western's lone win was registered by Bob Taylor over Toronto's Doug Anderson.

Aggies Edge Blues 73-64 Win Sr. Wrestling Title

The University of Toronto, senior wrestling team, competing for the Canadian Intercollegiate Wrestling championships in Guelph last Friday and Saturday, placed 7 of its 9 men in the finals, took 3 individual championships, but lost to an even stronger O.A.C.-O.V.C. team 73-64. Third highest point score was the University of Western Ontario with 33 points. McGill and Queens placed 4th and 5th with 27 and 9 points.

In the 123 lbs. class, Wally Kami-Takahara, (T), won a championship, defeating Brown, (UWO) by a decision on points. At 130 lbs., McQuat, (T) won two matches, and lost one, to place third. Gord Stephenson, (T), 137 lbs., won one and lost one, and also placed third. At 147 lbs. Smith, (T), went to the finals against Poirier, (OAC), and lost by a fall, to place second. Paul Hickey, (T), 157 lbs., won three matches, to take a championship. At 167 lbs., Loucks, (T), lost by a fall in the finals to Marra, (OAC), after a collar-bone injury in the first round. Wesley, (T), 177 lbs., also lost by a fall to Brightwell, (OAC), after a rib injury in the first round. At 191 lbs., Bob Waugh, (T), won a championship, defeating Hughes, (M), by a decision. Heavyweight Harry Robinson wrestled Blaauwendraat, (OAC) to a five all tie after nine minutes, and lost a disputed referee's decision. In Intermediate competition, between Toronto, Western, and OAC, scores were a little closer. OAC also won here, with 61 points, to Western's 48, and Toronto's 44. Toronto placed two champions on this team, Freeman Roth, 123 lbs., and Ben Hoover, 157 lbs.

Jr. Skule Eliminates Meds UC Thirds Lace Irish B's

By JOHN VOITECH

Jr. Skule edged Sr. Meds 1-0 yesterday at Varsity Arena as the intramural preliminary hockey playoffs got under way. There was no scoring in the first period as both teams skated hard and fast. It was a body bruising affair and both teams had chances to score. Skule got a break late in the second period when McDougall, Meds, was given a penalty. Wilson of Skule scored the winning goal on a screen shot capitalizing on the penalty.

Up to that point it had been a goalies' duel as both Skule's German and Med's Walker came up with some brilliant saves. Arnold and Black played well for the Doctors who put up quite a struggle before the game ended. Surtel, Gray, and Bielawski came up with their usual reliable performance.

In a game that was supposed to have been closely contested U.C. III routed St. Mike's 7-1. The power that the Redmen showed, makes them worthy opponents of Sr. Skule whom they next meet in the playoffs. Scott led the U.C. attack as he scored three goals. Dysart almost matched Scott's effort as he added two more goals. Banks and Passmore got the other goals, John Kennedy saved the Irish from being blanked by scoring the lone St. Mike's goal.

The game was featured by good stick handling and fast skating. The pace was fast and the Irish couldn't get untracked. McCann, Bulanda, Williams, Moreau and Manale played well for the Irish. It was only the work of Purvis in the Irish nets that kept the score as close as it was.

Blues Meet Mustangs

Plenty of home activity for Varsity teams is the slate for this week, with the Basketball Blues meeting Western in Hart House Wednesday night, and McGill at Saturday's Athletic Night. The Hockey Blues will be at home to McGill on Friday night in the last league game of the season.

For the cagers Wednesday's game will be another do-or-die affair, and the Mustangs need this one to consolidate their bid for the title. In order to finish in the running, the Blues must win their remaining two games, while the Mustangs could virtually wrap up the championship with a win Wednesday night.

The Baby Blues will tangle with the Western Colts in a preliminary game at 7:00, and then the senior contest gets under way. The last time the Blues met the Mustangs was in London when the Metrasmen won 86-72. In that game the Blues had nearly twice as many shots as the Mustangs, but their shooting percentage was way off. However there is a strong possibility that they will be able to upset Western on the Hart House court, and the struggle is likely to be the best of the season.

The ice Blues, who are to be considered as possible representatives of Canada at next year's Hockey championships, face off with the Redmen at 8:00 Friday in the Arena.

Blue Tracksters Win

Sparked by Dick Harding, the University of Toronto Track Team swept to victory in the International Track meet in Buffalo Saturday. Varsity collected a total of 29 points, compared to Buffalo's 11, McMaster's 9, LeMoynes's 3, and Western's 2, while both Alfred and Canisius failed to gain any points.

Harding won the 75 yds. in 7.8 sec. and the 440 yds. in 51.1 sec. Ross Linton followed him in the 440 and took second easily.

Arnold Deacon also turned in an outstanding performance, winning the 220 yds. in 24.3 sec. and placing third in the 75 yds.

Doug McEnteer and Jim Rasingwaite took second and third in the 880 yds., and Bill Eckersley was third in the one mile event.

Toronto's win was climaxed by their winning the sprint medley relay. The Blue team composed of Dick Harding, Bill Eckersley, Ross Linton and Doug McEnteer, managed to trounce the American teams thoroughly with McMaster finishing in second.

Varsity will try to hold their unbeaten record against the combined teams of McMaster and East York, this Saturday afternoon in Hart House.

Use Of Voting Privilege Urged In H. H. Elections

Assistant to the Warden of Hart House, Garth McDowell expressed hope last night that the trend of increased voting participation will continue this year. Election results of recent years indicate a return to high voting percentages of the thirties and the two years after the war, he said. Hart House had more ballots printed this year for Wednesday's elections than ever before, he added.

He said he expected more people to vote this year due to increased use of facilities, such as the Arbor Room, and better attendance at concerts and other functions during the year.

Polling booths will open at nine a.m., and stay open until 6:30 p.m. at various places in the House on Wednesday. Advance polling booths will be open today between 12:00 and 2:00 p.m. in the Undergraduate Activities Office for those who could not vote on Wednesday. ATL cards are required.

For the first time in three years elections will be held for the Squash Rackets Committee. Due to a misunderstanding it was previously announced that no elections would be held.

"One great indication of the faith of people in this crazy world, simultaneously threatened and comforted by scientific development is people's use of their voting privileges," McDowell said, and added "University elections, amongst which Hart House is a major one, is such an educational exercise." Certainly, he said, if there is one form of exertion worth while, it is that of exercising one's franchise.

Information regarding candidates is posted in the Rotunda, and posters are displayed in the Halls. All undergrad males are eligible to vote.

University Way Of Teaching English Harms Can. Culture

Mr. Anthony Frisch, who will be the speaker at tonight's Library evening, believes that the way English literature is taught at Canadian universities has done more harm to the growth of a Canadian culture than all historical and geographical considerations combined.

The meeting, at 7:30 p.m. in Hart House library, will be the last of the year. It is open to both men and women.

Mr. Frisch, who has published several books of poetry, is greatly interested in the encouragement of creative writing. His topic will be the teaching of English literature.

"It is not surprising that the most enterprising Canadians of university age choose the Natural Sciences as creative discipline," Mr. Frisch said. When asked about the implementations of the Massey Report, he replied, "if the heads of Departments of English of Canadian universities recommend that taxpayers' money be used for so-called literary research for the sake of Canadian culture, then I accuse them of fraudulent misappropriation of funds."

Applicants must be returning to a Canadian university next year as a staff member or graduate student. They must be willing to contribute to the work of WUSC on their own campus after their return.

Applicants should specify the tour they prefer and enclose the following information: name in full, photograph, home address, university address, birthplace, date of birth, citizenship, marital status, dependents, academic qualifications, professional or business experience, war service record, knowledge of foreign languages, previous travel.

Honour W. Whitman In Library Display

To celebrate the centennial of the first publication of "The Leaves of Grass", a book of poems by American author Walt Whitman, a display has been set up inside the front door of the University of Toronto library.

Mr. Foley, assistant librarian, stated that it is expected to be there for about a month.

On his visit here, Whitman found Toronto a "lively, dashing place", according to his 1880 diary.

On display is a notebook in which the poet jotted down thoughts. There is also a striking bas-relief by J. L. Banks. It was formerly owned by the first director of Hart House Theatre, Roy Mitchell.

The display was made possible by Mr. Albert Aylward and Mr. Frank Bain. Mr. Aylward is a violinist in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra; Mr. Bain is a cellist.

"That's right, they don't. But they still chase it, until it runs after them."

"Yeah."

"Make it a Molson's, I'm dry as hell," said Alec tossing a dollar on the table. "It's all yours for the racetrack."

"Gee!", the waiter said, then went away.

Alec looked at his empty glass, his hands, the floor. It was very dirty.

"Still here," she said. Alec turned around, and saw the lush skin, red lips, white cloche hat and the soft toned suit.

"Greetings," said Alec, "from the heart of deepest Africa. Pull up a drum and sit down."

"You're not so sunny."

"I'm a riot in bed. Do you want to know what it's like to be in a riot. Do you want to know."

"No, I don't."

"It'll really kill you."

"I said I don't. You're talking too loud."

"Sure. Sure. Sit down and bend an elbow."

"No. I'm going home."

"So soon. Just when the party's starting. I was going to order you a bathtub of beer. You'd look good in a bathtub."

"Very funny. Did you phone your friend?"

"What friend? Friends are near when free is the beer. Alec Graham, 1955."

"I'll see you. Goodnight."

"Just a minute," said Alec getting up awkwardly.

"Please, let go. The band's watching. I don't want trouble."

"O.K., O.K., I'm simple. I'm easy. I don't get hard."

"Goodnight."

"Can I walk you home?" asked Alec. She looked at him for a long moment, looked around the room at the people watching then said:

"All right."

"Fine. Let's call a cab."

"I want some air."

"O.K., O.K., I'm the crew, Captain. I'm the crew."

"Did you pay the waiter?"

"Waiter? I'm the waiter. Sure I paid him."

A dirty newspaper flipped gracefully through the air fell into a heap by the garbage cans and frightened away all the cats.

"Do you live here?"

"Yes. Surprised," she said.

"What did you expect, the Chateau Frontenac?"

"Don't get mad."

"You make me mad. Your eyes, your talk, your hands make me mad."

"I'm sorry, I just thought you'd be at a hotel or something."

"This is Montreal. Goodnight. Thanks for the walk."

"Say, listen, Jackie, no so fast," said Alec taking her by the arm. "Let's have a cigarette or something." She looked into his intense blue eyes.

"All right," she said.

"Good," said Alec laughing, his eyes sparkling with attentions. "Then sit down my dusky queen. Let's enjoy the moon."

"Yeah, it's far enough away."

"Jackie, you're not helping me at all, at all," said Alec, sitting down on the brown wooden steps that led up to the narrow porch. "Come on, sit down beside me," he said as he pulled a magazine from the top of the garbage can by the railing, tore out a full page then spread it out on the cracked steps. "That's it."

"Thanks," said Jackie sitting down slowly. "You're becoming a gentleman."

"For you, anything," smiled Alec as he wrapped his arm around her waist.

"Don't."

"Why?"

"Just don't."

"O.K., O.K., I won't dirty your clean suit."

"You won't."

"You don't have to get sarcastic," said Alec getting up and looking down on her.

"Still want that cigarette?" asked Jackie getting up.

"Yeah, yeah, don't get mad."

"You've got a great talent for making me mad."

"You're just too touchy, that's all," said Alec.

"Yeah, to your touch."

"What's wrong with my touch. Dirty or something?"

"Maybe it is," said Jackie and she turned and walked up the stairs.

"Is it," said Alec, grabbing her by the shoulder and trying to kiss her.

"Let go!" she said and jerked herself free. "Go home to bed and dream about it."

"You've got a bed! Here," said Alec tossing a twenty on the steps, "Let's buy another pillow for your fuzzy head."

"Oh, go home and sleep with your wife for a change."

"What!"

"You heard me, go find another girl. Goodnight," said Jackie and she walked to the door.

"Hey listen you where do you get off? I've had better and all white."

"Well, white or black, you don't appeal to me. You just don't appeal! Goodnight!"

"Appeal! Appeal! Who in the hell do you think you are? Something special in bronze?"

"Yes! I do. Goodnight!" she said, slamming the door behind her.

"Women. White, black or blue! You're all the same. All the same. Damn you!" said Alec. He threw his cigarette in the gutter, kicked over the garbage pail and walked up the dirty street.

Results Unavailable

Due to slow counting of Hart House ballots, occasioned by an "unprecedented" number of close counts and ties, The Varsity is unable to present a complete list of winners in yesterday's elections.

Debates, Library, and Squash Committees had not yet been decided as The Varsity finally went to press at about 12:40 a.m. At that time, the Hart House ballot counters had been at work for nine solid hours.

Final results will be posted in the Hart House Rotunda later today.

University Trains Intellectual Elite? HH Debate Topic

Is the purpose of the University to develop an Intellectual Elite?

Dr. William A. Mackintosh, Principal of Queen's University, will discuss this question at the Hart House Debate, on Tuesday, March eighth.

The debate will take place at 8:00 p.m. in the Hart House Debates Room.

Speaker of the House will be Mr. C. B. H. Watson. The motion will be defended by Mr. R. R. Price and Mr. J. R. M. Douglas, both of Victoria College. Two law students, Mr. N. A. Chalmers, and Mr. N. G. Stoner, will speak for the opposition.

Dr. Mackintosh, invited as Honorary Visitor, has had a distinguished political and economic career. In 1939 he served as Research Associate for the Rowell-Sirois Report of the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations.

In 1950 he chaired the committee that arbitrated the national railway strike. His other positions include those of Acting Deputy Minister of Finance, and Director General of Economic Research.

New Fees From Grads To Yield SAC $1,500

By BOB BROWN

Next year's financial position of the SAC is looking brighter by $1,500. A new faculty — the School of Graduate Studies — will be included in the Students' Administrative Council for the first time.

SAC President Bill Angus has just received a letter from Simcoe Hall advising him that the SAC's formal request to the Board of Governors that all new Grad Students be included in the Council — and required to pay the $5.00 per student annual SAC levy — has been approved.

Angus hailed the Board of Governors' decision as such that edly the most significant development of the Council year."

The terms of the Board of Governors' decision are such that no student presently enrolled in Grad School will have to pay the SAC fee — or be a member of the SAC — either this year or any other.

The $5.00 per student SAC fee (which is collected by University authorities from the students fee) will be paid only by new members of the Grad School.

Angus states that this would mean that the SAC would derive revenue from about 300 new entrants to the School of Graduate Studies for the financial year 1955-56. Thus the SAC would have approximately $1,500 in additional revenue to meet its financial needs, of which $150 would be earmarked for NFCUS fees.

Several members of the Council have called attention to the financial plight of the SAC, saying that the $4,600 grant to NFCUS and additional expenses in the SAC office would mean that other SAC activities would have to be curtailed. However, Angus said that the admission of the Grad School to the SAC would "relieve immediate financial embarrassment." He also stated that the decision would mean additional revenue increases for the SAC over the period of the next few years as the percentage of students in the Graduate School paying the fee rises with the enrollment of new students and the graduation of the old students.

Angus also said "We welcome the addition of the School of Graduate Studies and their SAC representative to the Council."

A scholar of international reputation in the field of philosophy — Dr. H. J. Paton — will be guest speaker next week at a final meeting of the University of Toronto Philosophical Society.

Dr. Paton, a member of the British Academy will address the undergraduates on, "The linguistic veto against the philosophy of religion."

His address will be given on Monday, March 7, in the Croft Chamber House of University College.

Dr. Paton's paper will deal with a topic with which he is thoroughly familiar. He has been regarded as a defender of the traditional interpretations of religious philosophy against what he calls, the destructive influences of modern semantics. His original paper will defend these interpretations against those who dismiss religious concepts as mere verbalisms.

The author of several books, particularly in the field of moral philosophy, Dr. Paton is regarded as an expert on Kant. He is a Professor Emeritus of Moral Philosophy from the University of Oxford and has been a Gifford Lecturer, one of the highest honours that may be bestowed on any philosopher.

Only one more issue of The Varsity is left. It will be published next Wednesday morning, and will contain 16 pages of campus news and views. All concerned are advised that the final deadline for copy is MONDAY at 7:00 p.m.

English Teacher Charges Academic Profs "Dead"

Academic professors were likened to "cultures living off carcasses" at the last Hart House Library Evening, on Wednesday night. The speaker was Mr. Anthony Frisch, a former graduate student of the University of Toronto, and now an English teacher at Pickering College.

"No one can fire a professor for incompetence," he said, pointing out that this profession is the only one where no check can be made on a man's performance.

Mr. Frisch claimed that Massey funds for promoting culture would be "fraudulently misappropriated" if they were used for scholarly analysis and commentary on literary work. He rapped scholarly studies of classic writers as useless for producing a Canadian culture.

"There is not one writing course leading to a degree at this centre of English-speaking Canada," declared Mr. Frisch, referring to the constant demand for more culture. He charged that university English courses stifle rather than encourage creative art.

Mr. Frisch, at one point, polled the student audience of the number of "dead" professors they had. Out of 133 listed, 58 were indicated as "dead." Mr. Frisch urged an annual "Cut Crumby Classes" day.

However, he admitted that the chances of an annual student boycott day of dead and incompetent university professors were slight. They would not have the courage or imagination to take such a step, he said.

"The whole training of Canadian undergraduates fits them into the groove of academic scholarship," he added. Scholarship by now, he said, is only an excuse to keep busy all those who have nothing to say.

St. Mike's Win Top Honors U of T Short Story Contest

The first and second prizes in the U. of T. preliminary Short Story Contest for NFCUS were awarded to two St. Mike's students, Jim Powell and Ray Santin, respectively. Jim won the National contest last year.

Jim Powell, IV Phil. and Eng., and Ray Santin, III Phil. and Eng., are editor and assistant editor of The Griffin, a creative literature magazine at St. Mike's.

From Toronto the two stories will go on to the National NFCUS Contest at McGill. Jim's story, "Out of the West a Cloud", and Ray's entry, "Carlo's Big Joke" will compete for first prize, to be published in The Liberty at the prevailing rate, and a second prize of $50 cash.

The winning entry by Jim Powell, in last year's National Contest is titled "The Wild Canary".

Pharmacy Greet Public

Have you ever rolled pills or punched them? Have you ever tried to mix oil and water? These and a thousand other wonders of modern Pharmacy will be on display at the Faculty of Pharmacy's open house next Monday and Tuesday, March 7 and 8. Measured doses of laboratory demonstrations will depict the many ingredients compounded into a pharmacist's education. In the Instrumentation Room undergraduates will demonstrate the measurement of physical properties of compounds in which great accuracy is necessary with the operation of $4,000 instruments. Library and museum displays will feature the historical import of Pharmacy from the alchemist's alembic to the apothecarian art and science.

The modern dispensing laboratory, built last year, will be the TV star of CBLT's "See It Now" on Sunday's program. This laboratory will feature Dispensing and Haematology displays, illustrating the scope of the pharmaceutical curriculum.

There is no admission charge and everyone is welcome to come and mix oil and water from 7.30 to 10 p.m. this coming Monday and Tuesday at 46 Gerrard St. E. near Church.

Our Revolt In Vain Are Satellites Still

In 1940 Canada went through a revolution and passed from a satellite state of Britain to a satellite state of the United States", said Prof. F. H. Underhill, Dept. of History, at an open meeting of the International Relations Club at Falconer Hall yesterday afternoon. The subject of the lecture was Canada - U.S. Foreign Relations, which he changed to Three Cheers for the U.S.

International relations are always determined by power and international politics are always concerned with the balance of power he said. In the last generation there have been two substitutions proposed — the communist solution, and that of collective power strongly organized under a single organization. Neither of these will work. "You cannot get away from the struggle for power and possession — it is human nature," said Prof. Underhill.

"We have passed from the British century to the American century and we must accept this," he said. He gave several examples of our incessant revolt against the idea, such as the refusal to join the U.S. in 1837, the repudiation of reciprocity in 1911 and the high tariff in 1931. "Every day we are trying to save ourselves from the States in one way or another", he said.

"What are we to do tied to the States?" asked Prof. Underhill. "We cannot be neutral — that would bring upon us the fate of Belgium. We must work closely with the U.S."

Prof. Underhill gave several examples of the accomplishments of the U.S. which Canada followed with much "criticism and whining". The military power sent by the States to help West Europe in 1947, the Berlin airlift, and the stand the States took in dealing with Korea, were among those mentioned.

We limited our contributions and "are afraid of splitting the country in turmoil. In the Korea issue the U.S. made most of the sacrifice and we allowed ourselves to be back seat drivers".

"On the whole we followed American leadership with a great deal of grumbling and a tendency to find fault", said Prof. Underhill. We criticize the U.S. as if there were no criticism from inside. "We should give the U.S. credit for pursuing a shrewd and cautious policy," he said.

The lecture was followed by a short period of questions. This was the last meeting of the International Relations Club, for this year.

Vicious Monster Attacked Staffers Cool-headed Editor Leads Reprisal

A terrified group of Varsity Staffers acquitted themselves bravely in a Tuesday morning battle with an unidentified monster. One reporter was hospitalized when Managing Editor Bob Brown 'swung at the monster with a 2"x4" and missed.

The monster was discovered when an inquiring reporter investigated the crunching sounds coming from a cupboard containing back issues of the Varsity. Looking through the keyhole this intrepid soul reported a glittering red eye staring back.

This threw the office into a panic. Reporter Carol Hoffman fled leaving the craven Managing Editor and his two incompetent assistants leaderless.

Using the proverbial ten foot pole the men (?) pried open the cupboard doors. Inside, amid a litter of sandwich crusts and empty bottles (milk), crouched the monster clutching a half-eaten Varsity liberally smeared with Cheese Whiz. (They're really delicious that way.)

Editor Brown leaped off the table and swung his club at the beast. (Base rumour has it that he was so frightened he fell off) Brown's blow missed the monster. Leaping over the body of a prostrate reporter the foul fiend (not Brown) scuttled behind a sheaf of Sheafs.

When informed of the beast's place of refuge, CUP Editor Chuck Williams laughed. "We've got it now," he said. "That's a sheaf that would give anything indigestion."

Editor Clyde Batten has announced his intention of giving Bob Brown the Order of Hero of the People, First Class, for gallantry. The injured reporter has been fired for getting in the way.

To the accompaniment of its gnawing and burping, Mr. Brown announced his vendetta. "This beast is tearing at the Varsity's vitals. This creature is undermining the very foundations of the SAC (building). It is subversive. It must go. Next year my first act as editor will be one of extermination."

Exterminator Brown is said to have petitioned the SAC for funds to buy a cat.

What do medical students think about health insurance in Canada?

As many as 200 University of Toronto medsmen and some faculty members, too, are slated to thrash over the thorny problem at a medical forum next Tuesday night.

"As this topic concerns the future of the doctor in a socialized state, it should provide lively discussion," declared medsmen Al Davidson last night while announcing the event.

Dr. A. D. Kelly, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association will be chairman of the forum. It will be held in the "Duncan Room", the new medical students' common room in the Medical building.

Although interest in the forum was reported to have been somewhat eclipsed by current medical faculty student elections, Davidson reported last night that interest in the forum was running high.

"Many Faculty members have expressed a desire to attend and from present indications we expect an overflow crowd," he said. Davidson is the local public relations director of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes.

A distinguished group of speakers including Dr. Fred W. Jackson, Director of Health Services of the Department of Health and Welfare, Ottawa; Dr. Malcolm Taylor, Assistant Professor of Political Economy here, and others will take part in leading discussion.

One source described the forum as one of the most important events within the medical faculty this year.

Frontier College Documentary -- H H

All students are invited to see the National Film Board documentary, "Frontier College", to be shown in the Hart House Music Room today at 1:00 p.m. Frontier College, Canada's unique adult education group, takes education to the backwoods. Each year more than fifty university men spend their summer working months as Frontier College labourer-teachers. During the day they work for their living, but in the evening these instructors teach such subjects as basic English, geography and civics to New Canadians and others willing to learn.

The need for students who will spend their time in this work is great today because of Canada's large immigration.

Eric Robinson, principal of Frontier College, and a group of former instructors will be on hand to answer questions.

New Fees From Grads

Governors to include the Grad Students in the SAC uniform $5.00 fee because, they stated, the Grad students availed themselves of many SAC services, such as The Varsity, Debating tournaments, Housing Service, etc., without making any payment for them.

The contention of some of the executive of the school of Graduate Studies was that the Grad students did not use enough Council services to justify the payment of full $5.00 fee.

The decision means that the SAC fee is to be maintained at the uniform level of $5.00 for the next year.

The terms of admission of the Grad students are as follows:

—the conditions of the levy will be the same as the conditions for the payment of Hart House fees for the students in Grad Studies.

—commencing with the year 1955-56, all full-time students who are not at present enrolled in the Grad School will have to pay the full SAC fee of $5.00 a year.

(A full-time student is defined as one who pays the maximum fees allowable for his course).

—MA candidates will have to pay the fee once or twice, depending on whether or not they are eligible to take the degree in one year or two.

—PhD candidates will have to pay the fee twice or three times, on a similar basis.

Brotherhood Week was celebrated by the Baha'i World Faith campus students Wednesday noon in Hart House Chapel, as they read from the scriptures of seven of the world's religions. In choosing similar writings from the Hindu, Buddhist, Zoroastrian, Hebrew, Christian, Moslem and Baha'i faiths, they say they hope to demonstrate one way in which mankind can actually realize the brotherhood so often spoken of.

Security

It appears that the Students' Administrative Council will be augmented next year by the addition of graduate students.

Purpose of this move is twofold. First of all, it will bring the graduate school into line with other similar schools and faculties on the campus, such as law and the theological colleges which are represented on SAC. Secondly, it will make the burden of financing certain SAC activities more equitable, in that graduates who use these activities, like the Housing Service and others, will now be sharing in the cost of running them.

Any suggestion that the motion was initiated because of the embarrassing financial status of the SAC, should be strongly squelched. It simply is true.

We feel that it is unfortunate that the SAC did not press for an increase in the student government levy as was requested by the student body last year. There seems to be no ground, either financial or ethical upon which such a request, if repeated, could reasonably be refused.

It is apparent that SAC officials were so convinced that any efforts in that direction would meet with failure, that no concerted effort was made.

Under optimum conditions, this latest move can only be a stop-gap measure. Even with the sum of over $1500 which is expected to accrue from this source, considerable financial wizardry will be required to balance next year's budget, even on a strictly maintenance basis.

We deem it very unfortunate indeed, that there was no genuine effort to get the $1 fee raise, for the additional income of over $8,000 would have secured the financial position of the SAC for several years to come.

Withered

Very soon now the fence will appear around the centre campus and students will wag their heads over the approaching exams. It is possible that during that period some serious thought will be given to the nature of the educational process at this university.

It becomes increasingly apparent that this university has become an instrument of inertia. Tremendous amounts of energy are dissipated at the college and faculty level, but these never reach a stage where they are meaningful for the whole university.

This is not only true in the teaching departments where college sanctity is jealously guarded but also on the level of extracurricular affairs.

The result is that there is no dynamic uniting all units of the university in one common aim. Without this kind of unity it does not seem possible for the university to maintain any sort of vital atmosphere.

From the academic sphere and reaching right down to the last club and organization on the campus, these arbitrary divisions are sapping the vitality of the university community.

Communications In Retrospect

By ADRIAN ADAMSON

For the past two years five members of the faculty of the University well known to many of the students have been working on a seminar on the subject of communications with reference to the social sciences. Edmund Carpenter, Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the University is the editor of their triennial publication "Explorations". Dr. Carpenter has had experience on radio and television and his anthropological studies have taken him from the Pacific to the Arctic.

Jacqueline Tyrwhitt is a Professor of Town and Regional Planning with the School of Architecture. She has had experience with town planning in many of the countries of Europe and has been for some time with the United Nations doing a study on India. Marshall McLuhan is a Professor of English at St. Michael's College. He is especially known for his book "The Mechanical Bride", a revolution of its type, and is currently working on a new one to be called "The End of the Gutenberg Era". D. C. Williams is a Professor with the Department of Psychology and has done special work in Social Psychology. W. T. Easterbrook is with the Department of Economics and is a Professor of Economic History. Thus their work covers the social sciences and more.

They are being sponsored by the Ford Foundation in their work. The original grant was made eighteen months ago and will end this year. It has enabled them to go into almost all fields of the social sciences. Their findings, conclusions and contributions have been published in a paper covered booklet entitled "Explorations" and its contents have created more than one sensation on the campus.

Contributors to "Explorations" have been from all over the world. I. Potekin and M. Lewin, professors at the University of Moscow, Dorothy Lee and David Bidney, world famous anthropologists, Gyorgy Kepes, a Professor of Visual Design at M. I. T., and many others. Besides contributions of this type they have published a translation of a Japanese folk story of the twelfth century, an eyewitness account of a Swedish witch hunt of 1692, communication by means of drum beating and gongs, book reviews (The Oxford Dictionary of Nursery Rhymes, the Voices of Silence, etc.), even the instructions of the Procter and Gamble Co. to their television producers of their "soap operas" informing them that they are not to "portray a businessman in an unfavourable light" among other things. The grant from the Ford Foundation has made it possible for them to sell the book at less than one half of its actual printing costs.

One particularly interesting study that they have conducted is the experiment with communications and mass media. 108 students in the second year of the General course were taken to the studios of CBC television, where they were divided into four perfectly equal groups. Each was to make contact with a lecture delivered by a well-known professor, but each in a different way.

One group attended the actual lecture in the studio where it was being televised, another watched the lecture over television in another room, a third group listened to the lecture as a radio audience, and the fourth read mimeographed copies of the lecturer's text. After the experiment each group wrote a "question and answer" test to find exactly how much of the substance of the talk they had retained. The results were not as might have been expected. The students in the television group did much better than the others on the average.

"Explorations" is to publish six issues altogether, each selling for a dollar. "Explorations 4" has just been published and is on sale wherever I go. So great has been its success so far that Dr. Carpenter has had to issue an urgent plea to buy back at a loss any existing copies of the first issue.

Non-existent Date—Interested?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

A week ago, I agreed to stand for election as a member-at-large in the 578 elections at Victoria College. Unfortunately I was defeated and thought the issue closed. However, the Varsity in their frustrated search for the Truth found it necessary to disturb my peace of mind by falsely declaring me the winner and then stating that I was a non-entity. This has made me the butt of endless ridicule at Victoria and has definitely jeopardized my future social life, as I am the quiet retiring type. I think my philosophy of life can be seen in the following quotation:—

"Beauty is a form of Genius — is higher, indeed, than genius as it needs no explanation. It has a divine right of sovereignty. However, the lip services paid at the promptings of bourgeois society have marred the original ideal concept. These are but false posturings offered up to the Hymenial Altar to assuage the insatiable thirst of common conventionality . . . Was VENUS — man's ideal — so cursed?" signed: The Cavalier, (Love's Labour Lost).

My name has always been the target of ridicule on the part of thoughtless individuals, but actually Fhoomie is an old Welsh name from County Bettws-y-Coed and I am proud of it. I was rather surprised that my name was not recognized during the campaign, as, recently, I have been associated with such campus notables as Ray Atkin, the Cavalier of the Street, Woody Friedlander and many others. These boys all realize now the significance of the name Fhoomie.

It would gratify me and help me to regain my confidence if you would retract your statements of Friday by acknowledging my existence as a real live Girl. . . (WA 1-0415).

Spanked?

(The following letter was received by Reporter Pat Moser.)

Dear Miss Mosher:

Read about you in the Standard. May I ask you this? In the day of Rise in Juvenile Delinquency, what is the opinion on the Question of Spanking. Were many in the U. of T. spanked when they were naughty? Did any ever administer a spanking? Would they favour spanking for naughty teenagers.

I would like to hear from any one who is interested in this much argued question. Best luck to you in your career and your paper.

Sincerely yours,

folk songs of canada

by ADRIAN ADAMSON
"FOLK SONGS OF CANADA" by Edith Fulton Fowke and Richard Johnston - Waterloo Music Co., $4.95, cloth bound.

In their new book Folk Songs of Canada Fowke and Johnston have given fifteen million Canadian music lovers something that is unique in more ways than one. Seldom, if ever, has a book of folk songs received such widespread praise and acclaim from experts and novices alike. Beautifully bound and charmingly illustrated this book is not only a delightful collection of the best folk songs found in this country, but is definitely a contribution to the culture which so many of us in this country seem to talk about with tongue in cheek. The book is the only collection of Canadian folk songs that represents a cross-section of our folk music. It contains songs of the French "coureurs de bois", the Ontario lumbermen, fishermen from the Maritimes, Western ranch hands, coastal pioneers, even Indian and Eskimo songs. Fowke and Johnston have collected seventy-seven of these songs dealing with such diverse topics as Atlantic shipping disasters, anti-confederation sentiment, nostalgia for home or lover, Christmas carols, or just general humour. The book comes with choral arrangement in a paper cover, or clothbound with piano accompaniment.

Many people have said that if there were any Canadian folk songs they would very much like to sing them but they had heard of very few. Since we have been deluged with the songs of other countries easily available and singable it is little wonder that we sing as many American and British songs as we do. But in the forests, the prairies, the maritimes and in Quebec, Canadians have been singing their own songs unknown to us, so close to "civilization". These are genuine folk songs; many of them are what we might call slightly indecent, most cannot be traced to an author, but all have an irresistible quality that has perpetuated them in their place of origin and caused their spread to wherever folk songs are sung. Of the multiplicity of American songs that we sing around our own camp-fires we find it difficult to visualize the cottonfields, the negroes' laments, 'Frisco, and Charleston, just as we cannot place the "greenwood", Ikke Moor, or the "jolly tars". Paul Revere, Waterloo, the Civil War, or the fights on the Spanish Main are little more than names to the average Canadian. But anyone who has seen a Canadian winter can sing with gusto the songs of the Canadian "shantymen"; a person who has seen the north woods in summer will again be reminded of them as he sings Land of the Silver Birch, home of the beaver. The Squid-fishing Ground will bring back memories of the sea, as will Bury me not on the Lope Prairie the memories of the ranch in Alberta. Anyone, wherever he may live, can enjoy singing any of the old Canadian songs: We'll rant and we'll roar like true Newfoundlanders, She's like the swallow, Bonhomme, bonhomme..., Youpe! Youpe! Sur la riviere, to mention only a few. These songs have arisen almost spontaneously and have continued by virtue of their innate charm.

Both authors have been connected with folk music for many years; Mrs. Fowke is with the CBC and Dr. Johnston with the Conservatory. The illustrations are by Elizabeth Wilkes Hoey and deserve special mention. The design for the jacket is actually a fabric design and is sold in many colours as curtain material, skirts, etc.

Mr. Adamson is a student in fourth year Philosophy who has had experience with folk music and folk dances.

a new interpretation

Fairley On Heine

By ROBIN MATTHEWS

HEINRICH HEINE. An Interpretation by Barker Fairley. Oxford University Press 176 pp. $3.00.

In this book, Professor Fairley makes a very important contribution to the study of Heine, by approaching him in an entirely new way. Until now, the critics have usually regarded Heine as a divided mind, opposing the Buch der Lieder to his revolutionary and satirical works, thinking of him as a half-Romanticist. Dr. Fairley frees himself of this confusion by his very approach, that of looking first at the evidence presented by Heine's work, then drawing his conclusions in the spirit of Heine, not in dependence on some preconceived pattern, philosophical or literary. It is a book of pure literary criticism; Dr. Fairley is primarily concerned with Heine as a creative, poetic mind. Dr. Fairley looks for unity in Heine, and finds it in the closely related groups of images, which recur everywhere throughout his writing in both the verse and the prose, early and late. Heine's imagery finds its centre in the theatre, and Heine is shown to be, in a special sense, theatre-minded; that is, he looks out on the world, which becomes for him the performance of a spectacle. His main images are considered in related groups: song within song; music and dance; chorus and procession; theatre and ceremony; carnival and costume; and animals, which tend to form a whole menagerie or fable. Finally, Heine's statements not only the earth, but heaven and hell, too. These images are very close to everyday speech and are instinctive rather than artificially cultivated, but they are precisely wherein lies their importance. As Dr. Fairley has shown, it is possible to see in these images "a sort of loose order in his writings, unsuspected before, like a shifting pattern seen and lost in the bed of the stream." Moreover, it is an order of the imagination, and therefore a creative order, an artistic one." Thus we are led through a literary study of the imagery to the prime consideration of the book, that of Heine as a poetic mind, one that looks out on the world, broadly speaking, a comic genius.

Dr. Fairley's study of Heine is disarming in its great clarity and apparent simplicity; we should not be misled into underrating its great scholarship, or into thinking that either the argument or the approach is "old stuff". This investigation of Heine is completely original; Dr. Fairley is the first to have seen this whole connected imagery and to have considered Heine in his true light. It is one of those essential books, which no student of Heine can afford to ignore.

A READABLE HISTORY

The English Novel

By WENDY MICHERER

AN ENGLISH NOVEL by Walter Allen. J. M. Dent and Sons, $3.75.

MANY worthwhile books are not readable. Many readable books are trash. But this book is one of the rare few that are both combining stylistic merit with sound judgment.

Mr. Allen's approach to his subject — the novel — is at once refreshing and informative. He brings to it an experience in writing novels and a background of reading in literature and literary criticism. Never merely pedantic, never merely superficial, he reaches for the main elements of any novel he is discussing, but never isolates his literary terms from the terms of humanity. This, combined with his own knack for humour and lively metaphor, acts as a humidifier to keep his material (or his reader's interest) from drying up.

Mr. Allen's literary judgments are not random. He outlines in his introduction just what his ideas about novels are, so that one is aware of the basis upon which statements are made. He does not take any rigid position on the nature of a novel but says with Hazlitt that: "We find there a close imitation of man and manners; we see the very web and texture of society as it really exists. . . . We are acquainted with the motives and characters of mankind and are taught a knowledge of the world." The novelist, then, is making an imitation of the life of man on earth. The emphasis is strongly on character, but Allen also emphasizes that a novel must ultimately be treated as a totality even if one dissects it for inspection.

Mr. Allen also tries to see with the eyes of history. In treating a novel he looks at the influences upon it from the past, its significance to its own age in the standards of that age, and traces its influences on later writers. He says we must understand why works that seem secondary to us were important in their own day, both in their own right and as "transmitting genes of development to the future," and what makes major works living forces for modern readers and writers.

In tracing the novel from its beginnings with Bunyan (he discounts Jacobean fiction) through the Eighteenth Century, the Nineteenth Century and the Victorians, this century to Lawrence and Joyce, he does not see the successive styles of the growing number of novels as a Darwinian evolution involving the improvement of the species. "Art does not get better and better. Its manifestations merely change."

One can open this book at any one of the major novelists and expect to find a good brief critical survey of the man's work with a few illuminating remarks upon his life, the opinion of his contemporaries, and relevant historical information, (such as the amount of the gin that was being consumed before a reformatory novel). Practically speaking it is an ideal book for examination purposes, but it is also one that should survive on the shelves after the crush is over.

Dylan Thomas' Prose

Quite Early One Morning

By PETER GRANT

Quite Early One Morning by Dylan Thomas. Dent and Sons, $2.25.

ABOUT the only thing wrong with this little book of radio talks by Dylan Thomas is that you can't put it on a turn table and play it. The selections are scored for sound; the rhythm and harmony of the spoken word are caught in them, crying for the strong Welsh voice of the author to let them out. Fortunately, his readings have been recorded by the BBC. The book is a complement to the recordings, reminding the reader that the poetic power was not all in the voice.

The subjects are random, ranging, from reminiscences of childhood to scholarly criticisms of the Welsh poets, including Mr. Thomas himself. In themselves they are not remarkable, but this rarely occurs to the reader, because he is looking at them through Thomas' own transforming, somewhat protuberant eyes. The experience is a startling one. Approached with his mature wonder, the sootiest Welsh coal town becomes a prism of light and colour, a walk by a culvert is a scenic excursion, and the whole dingy world assumes its early morning originality. Everything fascinates Thomas, and he has the gift of passing the fascination on.

More than anything, words fascinate him. His work glitters with Joycean, even Pogonion, word play. BBC men talk "as if they had the Elgin Marbles in their mouths." Eyes are "like ripples in the sand." Humble clichés are turned inside out, and the linings are beautiful.

For those who eye-with-suspicion all Modern Poets and their works, this book should be reassuring. There is here little weltschmerz, few back gloomings about the soul of Man and his future, no advocacy of revolution, religion, or other drastic measures. Even those who, like this reviewer, find Dylan Thomas' poetry "too weird to be comprehended, should find his "prose" just weird enough to be the most enjoyable of poetry.

Peter Grant is a student in first year med. He is a former art reviewer and cartoonist of the Varsity and an amateur poet.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Whatever else you do this weekend, you should avail yourself of your last opportunity to see the Intercollegiate champion Varsity Hockey Blues in action, when they tangle with the McGill Redmen in the final game of the schedule. Although the Blues have gotten so far ahead of the other three clubs in the league that they were declared champions two weeks ago, McGill is the only crew in the loop that could have offered them any serious opposition, and this Friday's contest is likely to be as good as any yet this season. If nothing else, the Tribe will be out to snap the Blues' fifteen-game unbeaten streak, and hand them their first loss of the current Intercollegiate season.

The Blues, who are probably the smoothest collection of hockey players to represent the University in some time, will likely smother McGill's efforts in this direction, while rounding out the most perfect season ever recorded, by any team in the twelve-game Senior Intercollegiate schedule. Should they dispose of the Redmen, it will be the first time a senior team from any university ever last-ed the league season without a defeat.

Further interest should be directed towards the Blues this weekend, because notwithstanding the valiant efforts of the Penitton V's abroad in Europe, there is a strong and well-founded rumor being noised about that the Varsity crew may represent Canada at the 1956 World Hockey Championships. The consensus of opinion seems to be that there is every reason to believe that this will be Canada's last attempt at entering the World Championships, a rather shabby ending for the country that has fostered the sport from its infancy. The difficulties of selecting a team and financing it, coupled with the abuse the Canadian team must take from the Europeans for their brand of hockey, make further competition by Canada unlikely.

Actually the Blues, who adapted themselves very readily to the American college rules earlier this season — a brand of hockey not at all unlike that of the Europeans — would make extremely powerful representatives of Canada at the World Tournament. The last time a Varsity club did this was in 1928, when the Varsity Grads, a cross-section of the Blue teams of the previous three years, made the trip with Conn Smythe as coach. The Grads won the tournament quite handily, finding little opposition on the continent.

The only thing really standing in the way of such an excursion is the fact that we have no connection with the CAHA, the body who makes the final choice. Of course things like lectures and labs could make trouble, but for two weeks there's no reason why they couldn't be forgotten about, and after all it's a fair amount of honor for the University. Actually the CAHA would probably welcome an application from the Blues considering the trouble they have sending a team over there now.

Next year the Blues will be every bit as strong as this season, with only four of the present team graduating. The possible addition of such Junior 'A' notables as Ken Linseman and Brian Anderson from St. Mike's and Mike Elik and Billy Harris from the Marlboros, along with several promising Intermediates, makes the picture rather bright for the Blues.

Such a team is likely to be as good as present Senior 'A' competition, although this fact has not been proved. At any rate they would make quite adequate representatives of the Dominion at the World Championships, and not only on the ice. From listening to the talk in the Athletic Office, and the wisdomed comments of several downtown sportswriters, we gather that this possibility is no longer a pipe dream, and that there is every reason to believe it could become an actuality before next winter.

From the Blue Room . . . Congratulations are due for Blue defenceman Dave Jackson, who was voted the team's most valuable player last week.

Ice Blues Face Redmen Friday

Varsity's Hockey Blues go on display for the last time this season tomorrow night in Varsity Arena, when they are hosts to the invading McGill Redmen. For the spectators this will be an opportunity to get a look at the team which might represent Canada at next winter's World Hockey Championships, and for the team it will be an opportunity to test the ability of their next best goaltender, R. J. Gray.

In a way, it will be a night to honor the hard work of the Blues' second netminder this season, and Coach Jack Kennedy has announced that he will start Gray between the pipes to face the Redmen.

McGill, who are now comfortably out of the running for the Queen's Cup, having already dropped three games to the Blues, will have nothing better to hope for than an opportunity to crack the Blues' undefeated streak, and mar an otherwise perfect season. Last week they split a weekend doubleheader with Laval and the University of Montreal, allowing the Red and Gold to register their first win this year, but dumping the Carabins 4-2.

Other than the starting change in goal, Kennedy will go with the same team that has recorded such a perfect season thus far. The big three on the first line will have to start pumping in a few goals to insure their lead in the scoring race, as Laval's clever centre Robert Lafreniere has thundered into third place, one point short of Paul Knox, and has two games to play. Meanwhile, Don Cossar, the hardest working centre man in the league, is quietly slipping up behind the leaders, and an outburst tomorrow night could shove him into one of the top three slots.

The Blues have had little trouble this season, while swamping their opposition by good scores in most of their games. The closest shave was the 1-1 tie with the Carabins in Verdun, and that was probably their only bad night. After a two-week layoff they are likely to be in as good shape as ever to face the Tribe, and the result will be the usual fast game with all the trimmings.

Blues Bow Out 86-81 Mustangs Aim at Title

By TOM WILLIAMS

The Western Mustangs turned control of the backboards into an '86-81 win over the Varsity Blues last night at Hart House, thus destroying any hope the locals had of even sharing the Intercollegiate championship.

The win for the Mustangs virtually cinched at least a tie for the Wilson Trophy. One victory for the Western crew in their remaining two games with the Assumption Purple Raiders will assure them of the title.

Height was the big factor in the Western victory as had been expected. Towering Ray Monnot, Coult Osborne and Chris Ellis, the BIG big guns in the Mustangs' attack appeared at times to be playing handball on the home boards. Monnot, whose twenty-one tied him with team-mate Ellis for high point honours, counted a majority of his total on tip-ins.

At Vaichulis, high for the Blues with fourteen, along with Art Binnington did most of the Varsity rebounding. Vaichulis, incidentally, hooped all of his points in the first half, fouling out after only three minutes of the second.

This latter was evidence of the Blues' poor shooting, which was probably as much a factor in their downfall as their disadvantage in height. In the first half they shot an atrocious twenty-two per cent, as compared with Western's sensational fifty-three, to trail at the half, 53-39. In the second half the margin was destroyed, both clubs shooting thirty-two per cent, with the Blues attempting a greater number.

Along with Monnot and Ellis, Coulter Osborne was high for the Mustangs with sixteen, while Walt Karabin hooped eight.

Pete Potter, Art Binnington and Leo Madden each scored twelve to follow Varsity high man Vaichulis. While he only hooped four, Steve Oneschuk played an inspired game in his longest work-out of the season.

Irish Slip By SPS 33-32 As Basketball Season Ends

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Yesterday marked the end of the intramural basketball schedule and today marks the beginning of the playoffs which are expected to end on or about St. Patrick's Day.

On Tuesday afternoon St. Mike's

A ended their schedule by eking out a 33-32 win over Senior Skule. The win, their sixth in a row, was another justification for the choice of St. Mike's to reach the semi-finals along with Junior Skule and Law A and along with one of the many other teams competing in the playoffs.

The St. Mike victory came about as a result of the rebounding of Don Primeau, the fair shooting of John Sheppard, and the hustle of Tom Fletcher.

Primeau kept the St. Mike's ball club in the game in the first and second periods as he snagged rebound after rebound in a most consistent fashion.

Sheppard was St. Mike's high scorer with 16. In the last few minutes of the last period Sheppard sank three foul shots that gave his team a 33-30 lead over Skule.

Tall Don Ottaway of Skule with eight points scored a basket in the last second of play, making the score 33-32, but a few seconds earlier he missed a technical foul shot that would have tied the score 33-33. Tom Fletcher of St. Mike's was another high scorer with eight.

In another game Tuesday, St. Mike's easily handled SPS VI, 51-39. High scorer of the game was John Iglar of St. Mike's with 15. Mike Kyranis was Skule's top man with thirteen. Yesterday U.C. III topped SPS IV, 38-21.

PHE Gals Top St. Hilda's 2-1

In the usual way of women's sports on the campus, PHE earned a playoff spot in the first division yesterday, drowning St. Hilda's chances by a 2-1 victory. The two teams were tied for second place.

The Saints opened the scoring in the second period on a long tally by Heather MacPherson, who played a strong game for the losers. With twenty seconds left in the period, Nancy Doult tied it up with a beautiful goal from in front of the crease.

In the third period, both teams played well but to no avail until with three minutes to play, P.H.E. pulled their goalie and put four forwards on the ice. The Saints held them off for two minutes, until with twenty seconds to go, Jacky Cohoon sunk one, and the Physeds won the game 2-1.

So it looks like P.H.E. and POTS battle it out in the finals. It should be an exciting playoff. May the best team win.

St. Mike's Tie Dents

By JOHN VOJTECH

You can always count on the Irish to upset the applecart. On Tuesday, the St. Mike's C's were expected to bow out of the preliminary intramural hockey finals to Dent's A's by at least five goals, or so the experts predicted. Instead, the Irish team came up with one of its best performances of the season to force the Dentists into a 2-2 deadlock. Forty-nine minutes in penalties were handed out by the busy referees.

The tie proved costly for the Irish as they lost Kirby early in the game. He suffered a badly cut leg when one of the gates in the boards suddenly opened. We can't help but wonder why that gate wasn't properly closed before the game started. McKinnon, on the same play, received a gash immediately below his eyebrow from a Dents' player's stick.

Kevin McKinney and Leo McGuigan scored for the Irish while Dowlas and Kirson scored for Dents. Tim Donovan collected fifteen of the St. Mike's twenty-four minutes in penalties.

Jack Tait, Graham O'Connor and Dave Bowers played well for the Irish while Kreuzel, Stewart, and Kerr starred for Dents.

St. Mike's A's walked all over SPS V in defeating them 7-0. Frank Gilonna led the Irish attack as he scored two goals. O'Neill, DeCarlo, Legge, Shepherd and Stock were the other St. Mike's scorers.

Norm Frenette, looking much like a man from Mars in his new nose guard, played well for the Irish on defence. Horvat, Lawless and Halligan also starred in the Irish cause. MacIntyre and Muik played well in a losing cause.

Cagers To Play McGill Redmen In Season's Last Athletic Night

Varsity's Basketball Blues will be hosts to the McGill Redmen in the final Intercollegiate tilt of the current season Saturday night in Hart House. It will also be the occasion for the last Athletic Night of the year, and the Baby Blue cagers will meet OAC in the preliminary beginning at 7:00. Also slated for the evening card will be the Intramural Gymnastic Championship, as well as the usual light entertainment.

The Blues last met the Redmen in Montreal a week ago, and laced the Tribe 77-47. However, after last night's close tilt with the Western Mustangs, the Blues' title hopes are over for the season. The best they can hope for now is a six and four record, enough to tie them with Assumption for third place if the Raiders lose both their remaining games to Western.

The Blues will throw the same ten men against the Redmen that won them the game in Montreal last weekend. High-scoring guard Don Fawcett will be out to increase his average while contributing to the expected Blue win. Fawcett is presently in sixth place in the league scoring race with a 15.4 average in nine games. Leo Madden is next high man for the Blues during the regular schedule with 103 points in nine games.

Interfac All-Stars

Realizing that this is the sort of thing that makes enemies left and right, but nevertheless attempting a fair evaluation of a difficult situation, the interfacuity hockey and basketball writers of the Varsity have selected first and second all-star teams based on this season's intramural activity.

It is extremely difficult for a small number of people to adequately cover the vast interfacuity field, and in some instances there will be errors in judgment, but the Varsity sportswriters feel that the teams they have chosen represent the best to be seen this season in the interfacuity leagues. The choices were as follows.

HOCKEY

First Team — Goal—Jack Andrews (St. Mike's A); Defence—Bill Reddall (St. Mike's A), Gary

Wadsworth (St. Mike's A); Forwards—John Hubicki (Sr. SPS), Bob Cruise (Sr. SPS), Frank Gianna (St. Mike's A).

BASKETBALL

First Team — Guards—Jerry Edelist (Pre-Meds), Tom Fletcher (St. Mike's A); Forwards—John Sheppard (St. Mike's A), Jack Iwanicki (Law A), Bill Karpinski (Jr. SPS).

Second Team — Guards—Jerry Gray (Dentistry A), Ted Luck (Law A); Forwards — Al Fraser (Jr. SPS), Dave Primeau (St. Mike's A), Bill Schwetz (Dentistry A).

Rearguard Jackson Chosen Most Valuable Blue Player

Standout Blue defenceman Dave Jackson was chosen last week as the most valuable player on the Blue hockey team, an honor voted for by his team-mates.

Jackson came to the Blues this season after two years with the OHA Junior 'A' Marlboros, and has still two more seasons of competition left with the Varsity Seniors. Playing alongside Captain Red Stephen, as one of the starting Blue defencemen, Jackson has turned in a tremendous season at the blue line, while assisting on eleven goals.

He is also a very capable forward, in fact he began this season at that position until early injuries to the club moved him back on defence. Jackson will see action tomorrow night in the league finale against the McGill Redmen.

March 10 Date of Music Concert

Come One, Come All--It's For Free

Several innovations mark the first concert by the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Chorus on Thursday, March 10, at 8:15 p.m., in Convocation Hall.

Commerce Mag No Money Rag But Waves A Serious Flag

This year's issue of The Commerce Journal — the only publication prepared by students on this campus with a wide outside circulation — will go on sale next week, announced a Commerce Club spokesman.

The Magazine is published annually by the Commerce Club, the organization of the Commerce and Finance Students. It contains nine articles written by graduates, professors, and others connected with or interested in the broader aspects of Commerce.

The Commerce Journal, which goes on sale next week in the main hall of the Economics Building, contains this year an article by Prof. L. T. Morgan which is his reply to Toynbee's question — "Is Homo the Sap getting any happier?"

Another article, by Prof. C. A. Ashley, discusses the history and background of NFUS and the IUS.

Other topics discussed in the Journal are the role of the government in promoting fair labor standards, and the dynamics of television.

This year, the Commerce Club spokesman stated, an effort will be made for the first time to distribute the Journal to all students on the campus who have an interest in Commerce, instead of just the C & F students. The price of The Commerce Journal is $1.00.

The magazine is already sold on a subscription basis to many people all over the U.S.A. and Canada, he stated.

for chorus, orchestra, and soloists, and the performance will be conducted by Professor Richard Johnston. The orchestra and chorus also join to present the Canadian premiere performance of Wayne Barlow's "Twenty-Third Psalm" — a contemporary American work.

Of special interest will be the presentation of a Canzon for double brass choir by the 16th century Italian church musician, Giovanni Gabrieli, said an Orchestra spokesman. Professor Robert Rosevear also conducts the orchestra in "Eight Russian Folk Songs" by Anatol Liadov. The balance of the programme will be made up of shorter works by Grieg, Dvorak, Bach and Handel, conducted, in part, by assistant conductors John McIntosh and James Coles.

Sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council, the Orchestra and Chorus draw their personnel from all divisions of the University. The concert is presented without charge.

264 - GLEE CLUB

The Hart House Glee Club will be featured at the last of the Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts this week. Just returned from a visit to Cornell University, the Glee Club will sing a medley of sacred, college and folk songs at this, the 264th concert.

Tickets for the concert, which begins at 9:00 p.m., may be picked up now at the Hall Porter's desk.

The Glee Club of fifty voices, under the leadership of Warden

McAdam, will, on Tuesday, record some of their concert works, and also some Christmas carols. They will conclude the year with a concert in Whitby, sponsored by the Kiwanis organization there, on Friday of next week.

The Glee Club will be holding spring auditions soon for any male university students who wish to join it.

Varsity Staffers At Work

Study And / Or Play Poll

Approves Academic Emphasis But

Frequent interferences by the vested Academic interests of this University into the regular undergraduate programme of extra-curricular activities has raised a poignant question in the mind of every alert student. "What have books and classes to do with a University education?"

In a sincere effort to resolve the controversy over the relative importance of the Academic and Extra-curricular phases in University life, we polled several of the most prominent men in Canadian affairs on the matter. Each had been, during his stay at University, outstanding in either one or both of these apparently conflicting facets of education.

The prevalent tone of all replies gave the impression of "Do as I say, not as I do", in that each spoke definitely for academic emphasis, while it seemed from their statements that their greatest undergraduate interests were extra-curricular.

"Any intelligent person", says Dean Woodside of the Faculty of Arts would place emphasis "definitely on the academic". A Rhodes Scholar and a man of wide

UofT Concert Last For Year This Thursday

The last concert of the year of the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and Chorus will be presented tomorrow night. The concert, given "without charge", is at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

A 17th century French setting of the 130th Psalm and a contemporary American setting for the Twenty-third psalm will be featured. The concert marks the Canadian premiere of Wayne Barlow's "Twenty-Third Psalm".

Russian folk songs, and short works by Grieg, Dvorak, Bach, and Handel will also be played by the orchestra. A complete notice of the program is published on page 12 of The Varsity.

The concert will feature the chorus, orchestra, and soloists, in single performances and together. Professor Richard Johnston will conduct the three together; Professor Robert Rosevear will conduct the orchestra with assistant conductors John Macintosh and James Cole (who are students at the University) also helping out. The chorus and orchestra, who draw personnel from all divisions of the University, are sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council.

interests in his undergrad years, having played football, basketball as well as having participated in Essay Clubs, Players' Guild and Music Committees. The Dean describes everything outside of the classroom as being pure "recreation", taking second place to academic interests.

However experience gained in extracurricular activities by Varsity Editor Mark Harrison, by former CCF President E. B. Jolliffe and by NHL President Clarence Campbell seem to have had a great effect on their life after graduation.

None of the replies received condemned outside activities. On the contrary, they definitely supported them as being of considerable educational value, and of great recreational merit. But they should be chosen carefully and with moderation.

Schonleber Wins Wilson Fellowship

A National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship, amounting to a grant of $2000, for one year of graduate study, has been awarded to John Schonleber of St. Michael's College.

About 150 Fellowships are awarded annually to graduating students scattered throughout the United States and Canada. According to the terms of the program, "the highest qualities of intellect, character, and personality are the criteria for selection. Only persons of marked ability and promise will be invited to become Fellows."

Schonleber will spend the year of study at the University of Chicago.

No People Come Scrap HH Debate First In 35 Years

For the first time in nearly thirty-five years of debating history, a debate was cancelled in Hart House last night due to poor attendance.

Officials stated that by 8:30 p.m. only five members of the House had come to participate in the debate. At 9:00 p.m. those present adjourned to the Bickerteth Room where an informal bull-session was held.

Topic for the debate was scheduled to be, "Resolved that this House believes that the purpose of the University is to develop an intellectual elite."

Dr. William A. Mackintosh, principal of Queen's University had come from Kingston to be Honorary Visitor.

Partial blame for the poor attendance was given to the many activities taking place on the campus. It was also stated by some officials that the elections had overshadowed publicity for the debate.

When contacted last evening the Hall Porter expressed amazement that a debate planned for Hart House should be cancelled. He could not recall a similar occurrence during his time of service at the Porter's Desk.

This would have been the fifth in this year's series of debates and the final for the year. Debating activity in the House is under the supervision of the Debates' Committee elected annually during the Hart House Elections.

The debate was publicized on the front page of the last issue of The Varsity.

On Campus

DIVINES DEBATE

The annual debate with the ladies of St. Hilda's College will be presented by the Trinity College Literary Institute this Wednesday, March 9. The topic for debate will be, "Resolved, that divines are a detriment." This will be staged in the J.C.R. at Trinity, at 7:30 p.m. Women are, of course, invited to attend.

A PARODY

"The Investigator", CBC's parody of Senator McCarthy, will be played today at 1:00 p.m. in the East Common Room. The programme was originally recorded in the U.S. and met with immediate success there. The record is now available in Canada, and has just been purchased by the Library Record Sub-committee.

Pins, Award For Varsity Staffers

A Varsity staffer's life is not always a merry one, but one member annually earns a little recognition and, this year, the sum of fifteen dollars, by winning the Anita Freedman Award, in March.

The award is open to all members of the staff except for the upper echelons of the senior masthead. Energy, faithfulness, inventiveness and integrity, as well as a definite literary contribution to the paper are required. Writers from all departments are eligible.

Anita Freedman wrote for the Varsity while studying English Language and Literature at the university. After receiving her B.A. in 1942 she worked for the Canadian Press, and then for the Globe and Mail. After her death, in May, 1947, a group of her friends established a fund in her memory, to arouse an incentive for journalism on the campus.

The Editor-in-Chief of the Varsity, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, a representative of the University and a member of one of the downtown papers, are the judges.

Several other members of the paper also will receive recognition for their services in the form of Varsity pins.

They will be awarded, however, to not more than five or six people for consistent and faithful work. The custom was begun over fifteen years ago, and many of the winners in the past now occupy key positions in Canadian journalism.

Campus Hot Air Changed New Gas In Old Burners

From now on the University of Toronto will have better quality hot air than ever before. Five crews have completed the awesome task of replacing the University's 13,000 burners to natural gas.

"It is amazing how many burners existed only to make tea" said Mr. Kurschner, foreman of the conversion crews. He found the work far from monotonous. "Every day there was something new. A lot of burners that are never used had to be dug out of drawers."

The most ticklish job was conversion of the burners under vital experiments which could not be allowed to cool. A natural gas burner had to be slipped under while the old gas was turned out. Mr. Kurschner pointed out that the new gas is cheaper and safer for the individual as an odour has been added to reduce danger of suffocation. He gave tips on lighting converted appliances: hold the match closer to the opening, not at the top.

Conversion of the labs was only a small part of the job — there were also house furnaces, institutional furnaces, refrigeration systems, water heaters and domestic appliances. Crews met problems in these, too — three workers spent a good part of one evening wandering through a woman's residence in search of a boiler-room key.

To Choose Ten For Finn Visit During Summer

An invitation has come to Hart House from Finland to have ten Toronto male students visit Finland this summer. The visit will continue the history of Finnish-Canadian Student relation, for ten Toronto students visited Finland in 1951.

Last Spring Hart House, through the Exploration Society, which wanted to give the visitors a chance to see as many aspects of Canadian life as possible, returned the first invitation, and ten Finnish students came to Canada.

This year's proposed program is similar to that provided for the Finns in Canada last year; there will be a two week introduction period and then the members of the party will go to work in various parts of Finland.

Applications for this work-study tour will be received at the office of the Warden of Hart House, and any male student of the University may apply before March 16th. Each person will be expected to cover part of the travel expense to Finland but it may be expected that all expenses will be met out of summer earnings.

SAC At a Glance

Spent $60,000 Also

By RALPH BERRIN

The Students' Administrative council this year besides other things:

- spent $60,000.
- killed the setting up of a co-ordinating committee for campus activities to prevent conflict of dates,
- were told that the report of a majority decision of the UTDU favouring debating retrials and U.S. tours was not brought before SAC but an opposing statement was expressed and acted upon,
- heard nothing from one SAC member all year long,

—were informed that Skule is now School,

- would not even second a motion to ameliorate the student's lot by installing cigarette and coke-vending machines in the Library,
- tried to find the meaning of student government,
- changed the constitution of the Blue and White Society and the Music Committee,
- made an attempt to re-instate the All Varsity Review,
- heard Dent's rep Joe Slogon say that for once he was in complete agreement with The Varsity Editor; in fact agreed twice.

A Year of NFCUS An Active Controversy

By PAT MOSER
Varsity Staff Reporter

NFCUS — National Federation of Canadian University Students — had an active and controversial year. The annual week long conference opened here in Toronto on Oct. 18. At that time NFCUS, with Antonio Enriquez as National President, included 41,000 students from 22 universities across Canada. Prior to the conference Enriquez addressed the Students' Administrative Council when SAC took an anti-IUS stand in a vote of 12-5.

At the conference the University of Montreal withdrew from NFCUS and Windsor's Assumption College and New Brunswick's Saint Francis Xavier University were officially admitted. The number of universities was raised to 23, the student enrolment to 41,300.

A few days later Doug Burns of Alberta University was elected NFCUS National President.

It was stated in the conference that Toronto University would not be allowed to remain as a member of NFCUS unless it promised to raise the full 50c per student NFCUS fee by Jan. 31. Last year when SAC asked that SAC fees be increased from $5.00 to $6.00 with a 30c increase to go to NFCUS, raising Toronto's contribution to 50c per student, the request was turned down by the Board of Governors.

It was also decided that NFCUS observers be sent to the next meeting of IUS but that NFCUS would not join this year.

In early November McGill students in Montreal approved the payment of the 50c fee to NFCUS, while Acadia University withdrew. Toronto, Manitoba, British Columbia, and Dalhousie also had to agree to pay the 50c or withdraw.

In the last week of Nov. five NFCUS delegates met with Prime Minister St. Laurent to discuss the NFCUS plan of a 5,000,000-a-year scholarship and bursary fund for needy Canadian students. The Prime Minister said that no immediate action could be taken.

In the External Affairs Committee ten days before the final decision, a straw vote of 17-1 decided to remain in NFCUS. In various meetings over the campus the question of Toronto remaining in NFCUS was vigorously discussed. Pharmacy and Vic rejected NFCUS and U.C. Women approved continued membership. "Dalhousie University students decided to remain members of NFCUS on Jan. 26 in a vote of 399-60.

The big question was Engineering with its close to 2,000 votes. Al Waldon, SAC NFCUS chairman, opposed, and Gord Hurlburt the second representative, was supporting NFCUS. Each cast one half of the SPS votes.

Wed. night, Jan. 26, SAC decided to remain in NFCUS by a vote of 20-5. The five opposing faculties were Vic Men and Women, St. Michael's Men, Forestry and Pharmacy. Waldon and Hurlburt were mandated by the Engineering Society to vote in favour of NFCUS.

In Feb. 5,000 students at McGill decided to leave NFCUS. This was the third university to secede, Montreal was the first and was followed by Acadia which left NFCUS after the conference.

NFCUS began the year with 41,000 students and 22 universities and ended its year with 21 universities and about 33,000 students.

"Eventful Year" Says IRC Pres.

"IRC had an unusually active year, in 54-55," said president Tom Virany, "and next year with Ron Price as president, things should be even better." The International Relations Club carried out its plan of bringing to the campus speakers on the major international problems in an attempt to stimulate discussion. The London Conference, the Afro-Asian Conference and Canadian, Japanese and South American foreign affairs were among the topics discussed. Two of the other features of the year were the Caledon Seminar on Colonialism and the annual trip to the U.N.

St. Patrick Reincarnated Gives Varsity the 'Truth'

St. Patrick is with us again. From Patrick Sullivan, the self-styled re-incarnation of the great saint, came this startling poem and letter last week. We publish the thirteenth and last verse of this poem, telling the TRUE story of St. Patrick, and interspersed with numbers of astrological significance. "13 That's how the Roman, St. Patrick, Arch-Druid — Number One, 7, Transformed the Green Isle, then Eire, Into 'A Wee Bit of Heaven.'"

SAC Roundup

"It Has Done A Great Deal"

By JANE FARQUASON
SAC Vice-President

A casual observer of an SAC meeting was overheard muttering to a companion, "What a waste of time — you'd think they were either mutes or aspiring Mr. Gladstones." Despite this harsh judgment, this year's SAC had done a great deal, and deserves congratulations.

In October Toronto played host to NFCUS and WUS conferences, and in December to the Carabins — quelle joie! The Students' Council organized our charitable instincts and produced flood relief, blood and Red Feather money. WUS brought Mohammed Khalifa, an Egyptian student, to Toronto, sent two to Japan (no retribution intended), sponsored the Treasure Van, the SHARE campaign and the Caledon seminar.

Inspired by engineering antics the SAC discussed "student government — right or responsibility". To cope with future registrars, riots and what have you, a Student — Administrative Committee was formed. We pleaded with the Board of Governors for graduate fees, with the City Transportation Commission for a stop-light, with politicians in general for government scholarships, and with apathetic students for an AVR. Result — more money for the SAC and a new accountant to administer it, a library open till 10.00 p.m., a policeman at Hosking for rush hour, the proverbial promises from the politicians, and Michael Shoemaker.

And, praise be, at last the eternal NFCUS issue seems settled. No longer vacillating between "in" and "out", Toronto is "in", and at fifty cents a head. These accomplishments and the many others, the result of hard work by the various nucleus committees, have made this year a most creditable and significant one in the history of the SAC.

Apart from solid achievements, the Wednesday meetings

Assistant Varsity News Editor

The function of the External Affairs Committee, as it is understood by its members, is the dissemination of university news on the international and national scene, and the popularization of university activities across the world.

The faculty delegates reported on activities of the Weekend Exchange Committee, WUS, and NFCUS to their open meetings. But student interest in external affairs was not sustained or even very evident during the course of the year.

Under the leadership of Bill Angus, SAC President and EAC chairman, discussions are under way concerning ways and means to stimulate student interest.

Reports on WUS projects, such as Treasure Van, SHARE, the Exchange Scholarships, and the Summer Seminar Programme; on the Carabin Weekends; on the Caledon Seminar; and on all the NFCUS activities were presented this year.

Treasure Van, the sale of Greek and Indian handicrafts was a success this year, under the capable management of Gay Sellers, WUS co-chairman. The bazaar sold nearly $5,600 worth of goods, sending $1,300 to the WUS international programmes.

WUS continued the Exchange Scholarships at Toronto, bringing an Egyptian student, Mohammed Khalifa to do post-graduate work in Engineering. Mohammed has been very successful in his studies.

The SHARE campaign, interrupted by Hurricane Hazel last autumn, started on February 15 and ran for two weeks. Incomplete returns indicate a total of nearly $5,000, a large portion of which is to go to the Patna Health Centre.

An experimental project was begun by WUS this year; orientation lectures for those planning to go abroad during the summer. The lectures proved, according to Ron Gould, "very rewarding and successful."

The Carabin Weekends, as those who went on them know, were "smashing times."

External Affairs Commission Wants Interested Students

A wide open welcome is being extended to all students interested in working on the External Affairs Commission, announced Gruff Johnston, EAC member. He said that any student who is interested is eligible to belong to the commission.

The EAC, described as an "amorphous body" of students, is a point of contact between various organizations such as Share, the Host Committee, World University Service, and the Carabin Weekend committee. Its activities lie mainly among students outside this university, in Canada or overseas.

The Commission has an executive to which belong, among others, the appointed heads of NFCUS, WUS, and Weekend committees. The main body of the commission is the elected representatives from each faculty and anyone else who is interested.

For students having an interest or Overseas or French Canadian students, there will be a meeting on Thursday, March 17, in Falconer Hall, at 7:00 p.m. All Welcome!

For Japan!

Applications will be open for one more week for students who are interested in going to Japan next year to study. Details were in The Varsity last Tuesday.

The deadline for applications is March 15, and a decision will be reached regarding them soon after.

Miss A. E. Parkes

Miss A. E. M. Parkes, the versatile Associate Secretary of the Students' Administrative Council and Secretary-Treasurer of the Women's Athletic Association is to be commended for a hard job well done throughout the past year. Miss Parkes' efficiency and experience are a great help to the students in their activities.

Campus Clubs Shut Down As Exams. Kill Activity

In five more weeks, examinations will bring to a close the year's activities—of most of a hundred and thirty odd campus clubs.

Highlight of the year of FROS, (Friendly Relations with Overseas Students), has been a series of weekly meetings at which foreign students introduced their own countries.

The year's programme of the Student Christian Movement has included lectures on many subjects besides an Agnostics weekend and innumerable bull-sessions.

Among the year's activities of the Newman Club has been the publication of The Seminar, the full page newspaper.

This week's hotly contested election campaign climaxed an active year at the B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation. Activities included a weekly religious programme, a wide range of social events, and the premiere of a new play "The Spaniard" of Hart House.

E. A. MacDonald

Mr. E. A. MacDonald, the hard-worked General Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council deserves a great deal of credit for the strenuous duties he has carried out this year. His cautious counsel aids the exuberant students and representatives on the SAC to carry out their work.

Ave Atque Vale

With this issue, Vol. LXXIV, No. 82 the Varsity finishes publication for the year. It has been an interesting year, on and off campus.

On other pages of this issue you will read of the varied activities which have taken up the time of graduates and undergraduates at this university.

Passing in review, like this, the year seems fraught with excitement. The engineers' warm welcome to the new academic year was almost matched by Mayor Phillips greeting to the new calendar year.

Sports events, dances and, for the first time, a Winter Carnival, succeeded in keeping the between-lectures hours filled with activity.

NFCUS, WUS, SHARE, SAC, FROS, SCM; any and all of these filled the extracurricular air with their projects, campaigns and activities.

In sports, several championships were brought to roost within the precincts of the university. The campus newspaper, The Varsity, brought home the Southam Trophy for being the best English-language newspaper publishing at least twice a week.

Academically the university was honoured by the presentation to Professor Gilson of the Institute of Medieval Studies, of an honorary doctorate at Columbia's bicentennial convocation.

At the student-academic level, two Toronto students, Peter Russell and Evan Smith, were awarded the Rhodes Scholarships for Ontario.

Through all these things the news staff of The Varsity has wended its way, gathering and disseminating the information acquired.

In addition, sports staffers, feature writers and reviewers brought their talents to bear on their own specific spheres.

Members of the masthead and the senior editors gave direction and guidance to the inner workings of the paper.

The result has been the production of eighty-two issues of this paper. Issues which were reflective of the general sidelines pursued by students, and issues which attempted to throw some light on them and their value.

Finale

Now it is all over and we would like to express:

—our thanks to all those who have contributed, in even the slightest degree, to the production of this paper.

—our gratitude to the staff of the North Toronto Herald Printers who bore with us through difficult periods and smooth sailing.

—our regret that Fran Lightbourn our capable advertising manager is leaving us and our congratulations on her forthcoming marriage.

—our condolences to the SAC on their inadequacy.

—our hope that future critics will lighten their remarks with a little knowledge.

—our sympathy to most of the professors whose positions are becoming increasingly untenable.

—and our undying affection for you our readers who have stayed with us right down to the last 30.

Editor's Year In Review

By C. CLYDE BATTEN

There it comes again, welling up from nowhere, throttling with purple-veined hands the pulsing arteries of the heart.

A dozen times you sit here watching the mechanical slugs tripping across the page, marshalling in proud array the imperious demands of the typesetter's art.

In the beginning it's a welcome relief, loosing the floodgates of pent-up expression. You can see it all so clearly. The administration; handcuffed by the society within which they are forced to operate, stifled by taboos they cannot name and dare not forget. The university; lifeless and fetid, lying like a thing obscene in the very entrails of the city. Student government; dancing a crisp tattoo as other and more worldly pipers play the tune.

And so you write, — painting the picture with careful hand, marking its delineations with fretful pains. But they do not see, for they are faceless.

Later it becomes more painful. You are impatient with rage at those who will not choose their sides, or leave behind the ever-present fence. More clearly still the dangers present themselves to you.

Through the obscuring mists, you see this university emasculated by the partitions that sap its strength and lessen its vitality. You sense so keenly the futility of endless lectures, essays, and seminars devoted to the perpetuation of a scheme of life without meaning or beauty.

You try to tell them they must align themselves irrevocably on one or other of the scales.

There is no time left for indecision. But they cannot give their names for they are nameless.

Later still the pain is gone. In its place the inescapable purple mood of Weltschmerz funnels through your heart and mind, and only weariness is left to mark the place once ruled by eager joy.

How can you show them that their life has become mere multiplied activity; their education a parrot's training; their vaunted government a mummer's show; their social life a frenzy of "purposeless dust".

A hundred times you ask, where is the Christ your mission extols? Where is the truth your university seeks? Where is the value of this day's weight of toil? Has your religion become but saccharine sauce for a bitter pill? Is your university reduced to ever-increasing foliage and your life to heedless forms of social behaviour?

They cannot see that these are all one concatenate web, and they cannot reply for they are voiceless.

Then comes the calm. Fierce fires of zeal abate and leave the lingering warmth of knowledge dearly bought. Among this crowd of eiphers some few are found who know with wordless empathy the inner longing of yourself. With them you know that those who count for most must be:

"Unaffrighted by the silence round them,
Undistracted by the sights they see,
These demand not that the things without them Yield them love, amusement, sympathy."

Outpourings Of Gutter Minds

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It is apparent that the many protests which much of your so-called "humour" elicited from intelligent students towards the beginning of the school year have not convinced you that we have no interest in the outpourings of gutter minds nor approval for cheap slanders against the honour of the women of this University. I was unable to make this protest at the time mentioned, but your attempt at a humour issue last week has again made it feasible.

Misleading

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Last week in your news columns you reported a group discussion on Peru held by the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students. It was led by Manfred Rotman, a Peruvian student in Second Mechanical Engineering. The report was sparkling journalism, but out of context, wrong and misleading.

The article stated that police sometimes appear in tanks to cope with the students. What it failed to say was that this happened in 1948 when a political party called the APRA was attempting to overthrow the government by force of arms, and was arming the students and all young people with rifles and hand grenades and plying them with promises of position. Your headline "Situation Drastic for Peru Students" would hardly be all true in 1948 and it is really not news now.

Nor is tuberculosis as rampant as your reporter suggests. It is not 50% of the population of Peru but 50% of the working-class population in Lima, the capital of Peru, who have at one time or another had some degree of tuberculosis.

I think it unfair and unfortunate that Mr. Rotman was misinterpreted and misquoted in this way. An apology on behalf of your paper would be appropriate.

Alex. K. Gigeroff,
III Law.

Ed's note: The Varsity hopes that no harm has been occasioned to Mr. Rotman by the article mentioned.

Indeed your attitude is illustrative of the utter lack of reverence for womanhood which is one of the worst features of our so-called civilization. There was a time when anyone who would have dared to print such libels would have gone in peril of his life from those men whose friends, sisters and sweethearts you have by implication insulted.

I have no words to express how strongly I feel about the attitudes implied by your publishing last week's "trash sheet" or the preceding ones. I can only say that if you or anyone else think enough of your low and pagan concepts of womanhood to be willing to defend them against the true concept in public or private argument, I am willingly at your service.

Charles Pegis,
IV St. Michael's.

"Wine, Wimmen and Sax", as an introduction to Mr. Carswell's letter.

Either The Varsity is in that class which Mr. Carswell described — the class of those who write and say what they do, because they think that this is what the people want — OR The Varsity is insensible to the loftier attitude and calibre of Mr. Carswell's writing. Either situation is deplorable! It should be remedied.

G. K. Rodgers
III Eng. Physics.

Lofty Views

The Editor,
The Varsity.

The moral tone and content of some of the Engineering Society candidates' election speeches was vehemently and properly denounced by Mr. Carswell in Monday's Varsity. Sample posters you have seen in a previous Varsity and the description of the campaign speeches by Mr. Carswell was accurate, and possibly even mildly expressed.

The purpose of the trash that some candidates produced was no doubt to draw attention to their various names. This is the art of advertising. Unfortunately, such trash does attract the majority of people — and, here I must refrain from passing judgment on the attitude of such a majority. This brazen, sensuous trash is effective. Even The Varsity supported this view when it chose,

Discrimination Still Here

Charges of discrimination on employment forms have been levelled against the Ontario government by a University of Toronto student. Russ Manuel, II Meds, has pointed out, in a letter to The Varsity, certain "illegal questions" on government application forms given out by the Hart House Employment office.

"No person shall use or circulate any form of application for employment . . . which expresses either directly or indirectly any limitations, specification or preference as to the race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry, or place of origin of any person," is specifically laid down in the Fair Employment Practices Act, 1951, of Ontario, Section 5.

In the preamble to the Act it is stated that "it is contrary to public policy in Ontario to discriminate against men and women in respect of their employment because of race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin."

"Is the Ontario Government breaking its own law and is the University Employment office supporting this?" asks Manuel.

He pointed out that the employment office in Hart House is circulating applications for employment for the Ontario Hydro which includes a question on place of birth and for the Department of Highways which includes a question on religion.

"Both of these would appear to be illegal according to the act quoted above," stated Manuel.

On the "Application for Employment" of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, under the section entitled "Personal History" the applicant is asked to fill in "Country of Birth" and "Are you a British Subject?" On the "Application for Summer Employment with the Ontario Department of Highways" the applicant is asked to fill in "Religion".

"These are the only two applications which I have seen but probably others contain questions on religion and place of origin," Manuel commented.

He said that the matter should be looked into and called to the attention of the employers whom he hoped were not including the questions intentionally.

If any of the many students filling out the forms noticed the illegal questions they would not likely do anything about it for fear of not getting the job, Manuel said.

"I would suggest that if others see applications which include questions that should not be there they should ask for an extra copy and send an anonymous blank one to the employer concerned to draw it to his attention," Manuel concluded.

Antipathy No Apathy In This Year's Letters

University of Toronto students may be apathetic, but not the ones who write Letters to the Editor. Their epistles this year dealt fully with the major topics of religion, sex, politics, and the Varsity editor, not to mention igloos, art, and the advisability of mimeographed lecture notes.

The President's opening remarks about religious illiteracy started the year off in fine style, provoking both denials of this and accusations of general illiteracy.

The opening of the Arbor Room drew masculine protests, most notably the one from the Cavalier of the Streets. The Cavalier felt that the Arbor Room was an effort to promote Hart House activity by sex, and went on to make some rather nasty remarks about co-eds in general. For the next month the columns were filled with outraged outbursts of respectable females and blanket condemnation of such a vulgar subject. The subject was only ended by the editor.

Religion was the next big issue. Some writers objected to the Campus Cat's satire on Billy Graham; a great many to the University Christian Mission, which they accused of forcing its views on defenseless students. Even Pogo and a newcomer, Ogo, had something to say on this.

The Trinity-St. Mike's debate "God is Man's Greatest Mistake" started another controversy between theists and atheists, both generally indignant. (One of the former even advertised for an atheist: the results of the ensuing debate have not been made public.) While this was still raging, some derogatory remarks about cultists and ESP drew the indignation of Bahais and ESPites.

Political issues were also important. In the first term it was campus politics — IPA and Campus Comment. In the second term it was accusations and counter-accusations about the treatment of Arab refugees, the Arabs' fault. This spate also had to be stopped by the editor. The year's correspondence ended on a grim note with gloomy predictions for the future of the world.

CUP

Runneth Out

By DOUG STEWART

This being the last issue of The Varsity, past issues of forty-one college newspapers have just been relegated to the waste-basket, and we are forced once again to search our memory for items which aroused the greatest interest around Canadian campi this year.

Student riots and the actions of student governments monopolized the large headlines.

UBC Several articles in The Ubysey on discrimination in fraternal organizations were taken up by Canadian Press and made news in all parts of Canada. While investigating alleged reports of racial and religious discrimination, the editor of the Ubysey was told by the Students' Council that he would be forced to resign should the findings appear in print. He was temporarily suspended upon ignoring this ultimatum but was later reinstated.

Saskatchewan The editor of this college's newspaper was severely rebuked and threatened with dismissal for his support of a column which included allegedly suggestive jokes. The second term saw a return to more innocuous humour.

McMaster Upon receiving bills for work done in the clearance of a gymnasium floor for athletic events and dances by university janitors, the Student Council refused bluntly to make any payment. Ultimately a compromise was reached which students' felt supported their stand.

Ottawa-Carleton The Canadian University Press conference was held in Ottawa this year, Ottawa and Carleton being host universities. Discussed on the agenda were methods of improving the wire service between universities across the country, editorial policy, and the degree of responsibility of college newspapers to their Student Council.

What's news at Inco?

Tiny pieces of nickel speed cabled words three times faster across the Atlantic 1200 FEET DOWN, on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean is a metal case. In it is an electronic amplifier. Electric signals weak from the long journey by cable are here amplified and reshaped into stronger, clearer signals. With this single installation the cable's capacity was increased from 50 to 167 words a minute.

This is possible only because of the presence of tiny pieces of nickel in the amplifier's vacuum tube.

For years now, communication between this Continent and the United Kingdom and Europe has been a problem. It was particularly serious during the war when communication channels were overloaded by Allied Governments, military and press.

The first of these amplifiers was installed recently by Western Union on the company's cable which stretches under the Atlantic from Bay Roberts, Newfoundland, to Penzance, England.

THE NEW UNDERSEAS CABLE "BOOSTER" being lowered to the ocean floor, where it will amplify trans-Atlantic signals—allowing us to get messages from Europe three times faster than before. This is possible only because of the use of tiny pieces of nickel in the amplifier's vacuum tube.

Case Must Last For 40 Years

Nickel alloys were used at vital points to guard the case containing the amplifier against the many forms of marine corrosion that occur below the ocean's surface. A life of 40 years was demanded.

Inco research and development teams in co-operation with industry have been in the forefront of the world's metallurgical developments since 1921. The knowledge and experience gained are among Inco's greatest assets. Inco research points the way to Inco's future!

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request. Bulk copies supplied Secondary School teachers.

U.S. Students Visit U. of T.

A group of American students from the University of Buffalo visited the U. of T. over the past weekend "in what will become a new exchange weekend", said Mike Hare, IV C&F, one of the Weekend organizers. Upon the invitation of a group of 4th year C&F students, the University of Buffalo dispatched eight seniors in their Business Administration course to visit the U. of T.

The Buffalo students arrived on the Toronto campus late Friday afternoon.

Toronto students, who originated the exchange, believed that it would allow the participants to meet undergraduates from another campus, and also help the members understand more fully the problems of each country.

On Saturday, the delegations met at Hart House, where they first enjoyed a tour of the building.

The undergraduates then moved to the Music Room and heard the two papers on the subject, "Foreign Policy of Western Nations", and after that dissolved into smaller sections for discussion purposes.

One Buffalo member explained quite honestly that he couldn't determine any pattern in American foreign policy. It was agreed in the same group that one reason for the fluctuations was that different internal pressures were exerted on Washington within a short period.

The common feeling among the participants was that the weekend ran extremely smoothly, reported Mike Hare. When asked for his interpretation of the affair, one Buffalo student said there was only one word adequate in describing the affair. That word was "tremendous". The students felt that the reason for the success was the co-operation and teamwork of every person involved.

Although all but two of the participants will be graduating this year, the members hoped that those who follow can perpetuate the idea, and that this may grow into an annual highlight, between these two departments of business.

Southam, Sheiks, Censures Varied Year For Varsity

"For excellence among papers of the Canadian University Press" are the words inscribed on the Southam trophy, the symbol of this year's success for The Varsity. The trophy is awarded to the best English language paper published twice weekly or more. It was presented to The Varsity at the CUP conference, held at Ottawa during the Christmas holidays.

This year The Varsity covered everything from Sheiks to the President's Report. The results of a drinking survey were published, with repercussions from London to Salt Lake City, Utah. The controversy over whether or not to remain in NCCUS was extensively publicized in the pages of The Varsity. Eventually a decision to remain within NCCUS was reached, but interest was aroused again when McGill later withdrew.

The year was also marked by the publication in The Varsity of the first CUP wirephoto. A Literary and a Humour issue were published, not without mixed comment from the students. In fact a seven-foot petition was received from the students of St. Michael's protesting "the low calibre of certain material" published in the gag issue.

During the year The Varsity also suffered several motions of censure because of its "negative policies." These were presented to the SAC by the Dent's ep, Joseph Flogan. However they were not passed.

The Varsity's fame was not confined to the campus. Its name was spread across the country when the Western Magazine (circulation 160,000) did a feature on Pat Moser, a typical first year Varsity reporter.

Facts On Features

By MARY ALICE HUNTER
Varsity Features Editor

Features this year have included everything from soup to nuts, with emphasis on the nuts. Noted campus characters such as SAC members, professors, and club presidents have been subjected to the merciless spotlight of Varsity pens — also an erudite feline named Marcus Aurelius.

Beards, Bermuda shorts, and the deep symbolism behind the use of knee-socks, six-foot scarves and flapper beads were discussed for the fashion-conscious, while welfare work, and all aspects of teaching were described for the more serious-minded.

The peculiarities of such campus activities as the proverbial coffee-date, which was compared unfavourably with the tribal customs of the Kwakiutl Indians, and the perils of residence meals, were favourite topics for embittered writers.

The "Medieval Salad" of Hart House crests, the bitterly-opposed and thoroughly-enjoyed Arbor Room, the new St. Mike's co-op, the Vic union, and the Buttery were described for the architectural fiends on the campus.

The familiar standbys for frantic feature editors, of the UC gargoyles, Taddle Creek, and the annual Smith exchange students' opinions on life, love, libraries and Liberate also helped to fill space.

One of the more useful sources of information, which The Varsity used with great alacrity this year, was a handy-quick guide to clichés, with such gems as: "Welcome into our midst — Keep your eyes off my job." Over-emphasis on sports, the question of the Nature of Gothic in Trinity's new chapel, and the noise in the Arbor Room, were attacked enthusiastically.

A new column entitled "O Tempora, O Mores", reported by a slightly intoxicated Campus ghost told of the amoral activities of the past, past and probably next were the supposedly humorous outpourings on all topics which appeared in the lighter, less serious sense of humour.

Campus Year Coeds Outdrink

Six-hundred engineering students run riot . . . co-eds outdrink men 12—7 pints . . . Mayor objects to Hart House art . . . Caput Fines Engineers . . .

These were some of the big news highlights which plastered front pages of The Varsity during the 1954-55 university year. As the news curtain is about to be rung down, it is customary for editors to take a quick peek backwards at the year's events and to give a brief chronicle of main happenings:

So far as news was concerned, there was plenty of it, though editors and reportorial staff-members often ran into rough weather trying to dig it out. There was little interest on the international scene — in sharp contrast to the year 1953-54 when the McCarthy issue was bubbling over in the U.S. — attention was focussed pretty well on the campus front, with interest running high in sports activities, club news, news of national student conventions, the opening of new buildings, and, of course, in the handful of stories picked up and boosted into the national limelight by the big metropolitan dailies and radio networks.

The University of Toronto, a review of the year indicates, received more publicity outside its boundaries — both favourable and unfavourable — than in many a year previous. It all began with a whopping bang on the morning of the paper's second issue after a wild mob of 600 engineering freshmen had cut through University College and knocked over and injured Registrar W. J. McAndrew.

The demonstration of President Sidney Smith's action. Penalty: Engineering Society . . .

One of the year's most exciting news items was caused by a poll taken in the first week of Oct. 27. The poll was on the question of whether or not the U.S. Someone mailed a letter to the poll publisher, saying, "The poll is a lie."

The most exciting news item of the year was the "riot" in the first week of Oct. 27. The poll was on the question of whether or not the U.S. Someone mailed a letter to the poll publisher, saying, "The poll is a lie."

Professor McAndrew, side of his head, required medical attention. He was held by one of the students who were ripped from the wall. The fountain was removed from the 20-foot ladder disappeared. The fountain was damaged, flooding of the hallway.

Some "riot" damage was done to Trinity and Victoria. The furniture, but no one was hurt. The Engineers' Society, which had earlier been around the campus, held a ten-minute, held up the ball, stopped the ball, moved a small car in the House.

The incident was reported in downtown papers, so and re-interpreting —

As a result of the incident, which had earlier been reported to the CUP, and reported to the CUP, discovered in the investigation were attributed to "mischief."

The disciplinary action in the suspension of the Engineering Society, a fine of $4,000.

The Caput statement had been "indifferent" in charging its responsibility to the government. The public and the entire faculty were severely criticized.

The teaching body of Science and Engineering, power of student government. However it was late in the year, still carried over. In January, the SAC.

The Board of Governors, $1,000 which the Engineering Society put in a special loan to students from the Faculty.

One result attributed to the development of the among the Engineers.

Exam

By JO

As we are constantly reminded, the six-weeks-till-you-know is approaching far too soon. Exams are an essential use of the vast sum of knowledge acquired during the year. For the weeks can be described by adjectives, none of which with the high standards.

The ingenuity shown in ways to get out of very seldom successful, very sorry to hear that died — "Yes, he must no, you cannot go home if you happen to put down, accidentally of your professor will be waiting you have done. You could always try taking a hot shower in University Avenue. This is not recommended. Consider exams unenjoyable. So stock up on "No-cigaretttes, and gin. The Exams are coming.

The poll, taken by Varsity reporters asked these three questions of about 100 males and co-eds here:

1. Approximately how much beer or liquor do you drink during the week?
2. How often do you attend church?
3. Have you ever?

Answers to the poll were given on ballots and these were faithfully recorded by staff statisticians. (Although Varsity editors were not so sure that the answers had been as faithfully given by those questioned).

When all tabulating had been completed, drinking girls (some 50-per cent of enrolled co-eds here) downed 12 pints of beer a week while drinking college men (about 60-per cent of those enrolled) drank only seven pints.

Vying with the drinking poll story for sensational appeal was Mayor Nathan Phillips' "flying visit" to decry a Hart House art exhibit.

Time Magazine devoted a good portion of its Canada section to reporting the incident which mushroomed into coast-to-coast news when reporters from a downtown Evening paper rushed the mayor up to the campus to view the display.

His Worship found three pen-drawings of Toronto artists Michael Snow and Graham Coughtry "objectionable" and suggested that they be removed. Hart House Warden Joseph McCulley said no. And the executive of the house backed him up. The Mayor stirred up a lot of smoke, but he failed to set Hart House on fire.

Another much-read front page yarn concerned the willingness of a "willowy" campus blond to marry the U. of T.'s Sheik of Araby — a take-off on a much-sensationalized story carried by downtown papers on an Indian sheik who had advertised for a Canadian wife.

Other news highlights of the year, included:

- President Sidney Smith's report in which he hinted that enrollment in Canadian universities will soon have to be pared down.

- National conventions staged here of the Canadian division of the World University Service and of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. NFCUS delegates flashed the green light to hard-working Norm Chalmers and his NFCUS Scholarship committee and offered them a clap on the back. The year also saw numerous squabbles over the NFCUS fee raises.

- It was a big year for campus Christians as various religious organizations combined to bring the Christian philosophy prominently onto the campus — the campaign is undertaken once every four years.

- Winding up the year, members of Students' Administrative Council learned much to their delight that some 300 entrants into the School of Graduate studies would be boosting their finance by an estimated $1,500.

- Biggest response to money-raising appeals during the year came when students organized a Flood Relief Fund to help victims of the disastrous Hurricane Hazel. University's 10,000 students donated nearly $5,000 to the fund.

On the other hand, drives for money by the Red Feather — a few weeks after the Flood drive — and SHARE, a week or so ago, were not so enthusiastically backed.

Campus Boom In Building

By JANE EDGAR
Varsity Staff Reporter

The year 1954-55 saw a big boom in building at the University — libraries, residences, coffee-shops and bridges.

The first (and to many most important) of the new landmarks to appear was the Arbor Room, which opened with great ceremony — roses and free doughnuts to early customers — on October 9. Its attractions were many: its central position, the late closing hour, the juke-box, the mural on which any student can find his own portrait and the fact of it being a co-educational institution in Hart House. Its popularity was attested to by a survey which found it the noisiest place on the campus (except for the power house), with 95 decibels.

Another new coffee shop appeared at the same time — the St. Mike's Co-op, moved to new quarters in Carr Hall.

The next big opening was of the Sir Sigmund Samuel wing of the library, on November 26. The new library has many popular features: the open-shelf system, the attractive appearance, the good lighting (which incidentally promotes social life, as you can now see the student across the table from you). There is still some dissatisfaction, however — students have been petitioning to have closing time extended from 10.00 to 11.00.

A few weeks before Christmas the $2,000,000 Sir Daniel Wilson men's residence was opened, in conjunction with the centenary of the U.C. Lit. The Lit. Society refused to use its "tangible gift" fund to provide the residence with a TV set, U.C. men voiced some objections to wearing gowns to meals, but it is still a residence with 163 single rooms for men.

A building which will dominate Hoskin is still under construction: the new Trinity College Chapel. Its style is perpendicular Gothic, though there is some question whether it is Gothic garb or greatness. Trinity is also acquiring an addition to its men's residence.

All building on the campus this year was not done by professionals. In November a group of Wycliffe theologs, specialists in "high bridges and low churches" constructed a Bailey bridge at the Hoskin crossing from goal posts (Trinity) and bits of rope.

University building should be in the foreground for the next few years, according to President Smith. Two new buildings are already planned, a women's athletic wing on Falconer Hall and a large dental building south of College.

Campus Publications

By ROBERT BROWN

From the Toike Oike offices to the hideout of the Vic Strand, from the Newman Club rooms of The Mike to Trinity's dark catacombs where Anarchists publish their verbosity, — in fact, all over the campus — this has been a flourishing year for the local campus publications.

For instance, the Vic Strand was revitalized at Christmas under the joint leadership of John Burbidge and Bill Ward. The Strand adopted a new format, similar to Campus Comment's, and concentrated on news items of general student interest written in a breezy style.

Campus Comment, an independent journal of socialist opinion, is the only campus publication outside The Varsity to be distributed all over the campus. The opinions expressed in this paper, financed by the voluntary contributions of its supporters, are always vehement though seldom popular. It is by far the most bitter of all the campus papers.

Toike Oike had a low year, partly due to drastic cuts in their budget as a result of fines levied on the Engineering Society for the freshman riots.

Hart House has started a new publication, the Hart House Bulletin to publicize the various activities of the house.

Probably the most successful of all papers on the campus from the point of view of general journalistic excellence is The U.C. Gargoyle. In its very first year of publication, it easily achieves the first place in the use of format and content.

Incidentally, the editor, Aubrey Golden, is a former Varsity staffer.

That the students appreciate these local papers is shown by the publication by several Meds students of The Prod, in an attempt to get the Meds Society to resume publication of The Probe, the official Meds paper.

These smaller publications, by concerning themselves with local college and faculty news and views, form an important feature of the U. of T.'s student life. They reflect the University's divided nature and internal pettiness, but they also show something of its reoccurring vitality.

In traditional Hart House fashion, the Hart House debates discussed religious illiteracy and the intellectual elite. They debated on the declining British Empire, Canada, international affairs and the government of Ontario.

Instead of a landed gentry hunting and shooting, England has railway unions shunting and hooting, declared the Cambridge debaters, on their visit here. But they successfully defended the declining British Empire, with its
"gin, sin, and chastity".

The Conservative government was charged as a class government
"working in the interests of business" by the Ontario CCF leader, Donald C. MacDonald. The opinion of the House was that Ontario has not enjoyed good government during the last five years.

This year, for the University of Toronto Debating Union, was marked by a well-publicized controversy over debating trials.
First the UTDU announced the results of the first trials, and the winners. Then it was announced that trials would be held.
Finally, after much spilt ink and hasty words, the SAC decided against trials.

Perhaps one of the most surprising events in debating this year was when in a Trinity - St.
Mike's debate, the government gave up its vote "to save the vote of this debate from misinterpretation." The resolution "that God is man's greatest mistake" was defeated 71 - 52.

A curious split was also observed in a St. Michael's vote about McCarthy. The speeches of the government (against McCarthy) were supported, 31 - 30, but a vote of confidence in the senator himself went 36 - 31 in favour of him. St. Mike's sat on the fence.

International relations seem to have been a favourite theme of debaters. It was stated at various times during the year that there was a "shot-gun marriage" between Canada and the U.S., that Canada and the States were living in a state of "peaceful co-habitation", and that "friendly relations cannot exist between Canada and the U.S."

The women of UC proved conclusively that it is not a woman's world, while the students at OCE voted 42 - 41 that a year at OCE was a waste of time. A French professor at Trinity, in the course of one debate, described a classics education as impractical.

The engineers at one point resolved that "Engineers do not deserve the right of self government." The general apathy towards elections was cited to support the contention. By the interest shown in the last engineering elections, it would be suggested that the debate had some effect on the engineers. The High School system of Ontario was attacked, and nudism suggested as the only remedy.

senior undergraduates. Use of the library in the evening accounts for less than one-fifth of the total use.

Not everything has worked out quite as expected. The central desk in the new wing was planned as an enquiry and registration desk, at which the volume of lending would be quite small, since I thought the Wallace Room would take care of most of the people who could not have access to the bookstacks. However, it turns out that the number of two-week loans handed out over this desk is more than double last year's figure, perhaps because the transfer of books to the Wallace Room is not yet completed.

There is, of course, a great deal of settling down yet to be done. We are still trying to make peace with the heating system, and there is some furniture still to come. More important, we are still moving:
the government-document move was completed in February, and there are still about 90,000 volumes to be brought out of storage.

Another thing that has surprised me is that students are making comparatively little use of the periodicals reading-room. Perhaps because current periodicals were in the faculty room for sixty two years, and have just now become available to all members of the University, the students are only beginning to discover them.

Use of the library as a whole is increasing every week, and I think it is only partly becausof the rumour that there may be examinations in the spring.

Since it opened for business on November 29, and especially during the past two months, the enlarged University Library has been paying up, in increased service, for the misery it caused during the months of construction. Statistics can be misleading, and cannot even be obtained when readers have direct access to the books, but it is obvious that far more people are being exposed to books than was possible in the library before the addition of the Samuel wing.

The total number of books taken out of the building during January and February is slightly lower than for the same months in 1954, but the decrease is insignificant compared to the increased use of books within the building.

Many hundreds of people use the open-shelf reading-rooms every day, and many study in the bookstacks. A recent spot-check showed that about five hundred readers enter the stacks every day; about one-quarter of them are graduate students and faculty members, and more than one-half are

William Ronald, whose paintings are the current disturbance in the Hart House Art Gallery, is probably the only eastern Canadian painter who is a follower of the 'action' school popular in New York in the early forties. The school itself is a bastard cousin to cubism and one of its more extreme exponents was mentioned in the Art section of last week's Time. Strongest in the hands of Hans Hofmann and Tomlin, the examples created by Ronald are very weak reflections. As an explanation of the school Hofmann wrote this in 1944: "I paint from nature. Nature stimulates in me the imaginative faculty to feel the potentialities of expression which serve to create pictorial life — a quality detached from nature to make possible 'a pictorial reality'. This is and must be esthetically independent of subject matter so that the creation may say what it has to say through purely pictorial means in the form of a spiritual unit which should exist and live for itself, as does nature, in accordance with the eternal law of the universe." This school, then, depends on the artist's abstracted reaction to a particular thing, that is to say the artist will not paint a tree but rather will paint, in pure descriptive colour, colour existing in itself, his own personal and intense reaction to that tree. There is no need for us to know that he was painting a tree — many of Hofmann's works are simply titled 'Painting' — but we must be able to recognize the reaction to a particular thing, artist and to feel with him the intensity of the reaction. Ronald's painting fails simply because he has copied to so great an extent the work of another man, Tomlin, rather than Hofmann. Consequently, he has lost the spontaneous quality of his source and the uniqueness of his reaction. It is

current disturbance

ART

The Hart House Art Committee has been rushing busily about collecting David Milnes for the show to be hung this Monday. Presently William Ronald vibrates in the Gallery. Mexican prints in the print room — much politics, much competent art work.

Rembrandt's Man In Armour is the most popular canvas in the Dutch Show at the Toronto Gallery, statistics show.

MUSIC

Jazz for the men who likes music. Massey Hall receives Dave Brubeck and his quartet for a first Toronto concert appearance on March 14th. Tickets at your neighbourhood ticket vendor or Massey Hall.

The University of Toronto Chorus and Orchestra perform their final concert of the year in Convocation Hall March 10th, Johnson and Rosevear, also Assistant conductors McIntosh and Coles, directing. Applications for the position of next year's assistant conductor are still very much welcome for both organizations. Deliver to the SAC Office before March 11.

OCE does the Gondoliers in the OCE auditorium March 31st. Tickets for the only all college graduate show can be had from any OCE student.

DRAMA

Bob Gillat, Hart House, wants people to read for parts in Camino Real by Tennessee Williams — his first production in the fall. Also, do you write? He would like to consider student scripts for possible production next season.

significant that in so many of his works he must rely on exotic titles — In Dawn the Heart, Man in the Moon Man — to catch the interest of the viewer instead of relying on the painting itself.

The exhibition is an unfortunate one as it will antagonize many serious students of contemporary art and also weaken the value of such men as Hofmann and Tomlin. I doubt if Ronald would be able to continue in this style, or indeed if any of the Group of Eleven could continue in theirs, if American painting were better known in this country. To this end I would suggest to the Art Committee of Hart House that they include in their program next year, if it is at all possible, and there are several difficulties, such an exhibition illustrating work done since the war.

prints

In a modest alcove on the main floor of the Royal Ontario Museum, the Museum's "Print Room", the Society of Canadian Painter-Etchers and Engravers presents its thirty-ninth annual exhibition.

Art,

Many of the artists make nothing at all of the stringent limitations imposed on their work by their medium. The artistic asceticism of black and white work, of all print work forces attention to the artist's reason for his medium, if there is one. These artists have come the first step: they are working in their medium, not trying to force it to purposes better served otherwise; not many of them, having accepted the limitations, are now proving them to be the special kind of freedom that they are.

I have a lasting affection for good work in drypoint, and some of the warmth of that medium's soft rich line is used by two McIntoshes from Vancouver in pictures of trees, also Anna Baker's Fish. There are a number of good serigraphs (I call them silk screen prints): Tulips by Mildred Dillon and Street Musicians by Gordon Smith are free relaxed work with an immediate appeal; Frederick Taylor's St. Cécile Street, Montreal is intelligent, careful work that improves with looking.

campus theatre, '54-'55

People are moved from time to time to deplore the fact (and it is a deplorable one) that Toronto possesses no adequate school of theatre where an aspiring actor may find secure and thorough training. Until this happy development takes place I think that the prevalent mood in campus theatrical activity is as good a substitute as could be devised. A student with a real interest in theatre can find many contributions to his theatrical education. Under Mr. Gill, whose touching faith in youthful actors has endeared him to many a struggling player, he can learn or observe the techniques of actor and lighting man, of stage hand and props. Since the position of Hart House Theatre in the University leaves it with a certain obligation in the line of full houses, its director wastes little time in off-beat experiment; this is not to say that he is unoriginal, which is not the case; but he knows what he is doing and is already master of a perfectly good theatrical tradition. It is no part of a young actor's education to acquire the idea that the only good theatre is one which is in the process of casting off all its bonds — who would go on building a skyscraper just for the sake of making it higher? Mr. Gill produces important plays, new and old, in a style which is satisfying and established. This year Shaw and Koestler, Garcia Lorca and Shakespeare appeared at Hart House; all the presentations succeeded in one way or another; their failures were in the nature of lessons.

Of the college drama groups, Trinity's seems most in sympathy with this standard; this year's production of The Crucible is an obvious reference; from former seasons I seem to remember a similar interest in experimenting with production rather than genre. The excellence of The Crucible seems good proof that the campus actors are not only absorbing knowledge but putting it into practice; the production showed a high degree of thoughtful competence combined with an interest and eagerness to learn from their work.

Victoria's group this year made a successful sortie into anti-naturalism with their production of Andre Obey's Noah which emerged with the bright clarity and colour so often characteristic of director Herbert Whittaker's work. The most interesting feature of this show was the use of lighting and blocking and poetic mime to achieve complete acceptance of painted figures come to life.

Of the special interests of St. Michael's I have rather less to say, for I missed their presentation at the Drama Festival while I cannot, from the vast complexity of the Brigadoon programme, disentangle the St. Michael's contribution.

And this brings us to the U.C. Player's Guild which, bless its heart will try anything once if only no-one else is. Miss Julie, This Earth is Ours, The Fall of the City and Hippolytus have all displayed elements that were unusual if not downright peculiar. Because of this fondness for the off-beat, because its work is all done on a very small budget and with entirely amateur personnel, because it chooses to do several small shows rather than one large one, the Player's Guild generally doesn't quite pull things off. But in view of the things they are tugging at, I think the members are well-justified in being satisfied with their self-assumed struggle.

These groups are the lecture halls and labs of the theatrically-minded; this year they have acquired a seminar as well. In the old glamorous days the theatre crowd adjourned for discussion and high life to the Chez, the K.C.R., the Di. Now they are filling the Arbor Room with table pounding and smoke and endless definitions of the true drama. The University has provided its enthusiasts with everything but a dispense-with-lectures card (wherefore much sleep is lost during the winter) and a degree. And miracles do sometimes happen, even yet.

diary of a scoundrel

The puzzling thing about Diary of a Scoundrel is that the hero, Yegor Glumov, is not a scoundrel at all. Witty he is; a smooth tongue he certainly has; evil he is not. The fact is that friend Yegor is probably, as he says of himself, the one truly honest character of the cast.

Written originally as a satire on the Russian nobility, Diary of a Scoundrel is now being presented at the Crest in an English adaptation purged of all political connections. Rodney Ackland, whose work this adaptation is, has rebound the Diary into a solid volume of fun and farce. The Crest people have taken and made of it an evening of excellent entertainment.

One of Moscow's gayer blades of the mid-nineteenth century, Yegor Glumov, scion of one of the city's better families, loses his father and with him his wealth and leisure. He is thus forced to consider working for a living. Brilliantly he averts this by hitting on a plan to live by his wits and the lack of same in others, the majority of whom are his beloved relatives.

So, in a rush he harnesses his pompous Uncle Mamayev, hot-blooded Auntie Cleopatra — pantingly played by Barbara Hamilton as a fading beauty who has always been rather ugly, a Countess with a past, now reformed to superstitious piety and the great Madame Babakina, clairvoyant who sees all, albeit her crystal ball is a vodka bottle, to his troika and whips them slyly on his road to success.

It is largely through the work of William Hutt as Glumov that a complete farce is avoided. While all other characters stagger about in the folly demanded by their parts Hutt varies his manner, at times playing the fool to fit in with the company, but, when alone with his diary, dropping all pretense and acting almost sane. Madame Babakina's swinish ways, and the rudeness of Glumov's page, Eric House, add a tone of slapstick to the play. As the repentant Countess Betty Leighton is very interesting, showing two greatly conflicting facets of character, making each seem genuine.

... intellectual sycophants?

The following discussion takes place during the intermission of a recital.

Peggie: This was simply wonderful; have you seen his hands? He can reach at least 10 tones. And how sombre he looks.

Critic: He is a musical colourist, he mixes . . . Peggie: What do you mean by "mixes"? How can you apply such arbitrary formalistic vocabulary which has to be defined whenever used?

Critic: But my dear, don't you see the inherent relationship between painting and music? This comparison could aid the listener.

Peggie: Nonsense, this is meaningless both to the layman who wants to know how the concert was and to the connoisseur who is interested in technicalities. The layman is mystified, the connoisseur disgusted.

Frank: I have not been listening to good music very long, so I can't pass critical judgments. I feel rather than understand. I certainly can tell you that I believe that he played nicely. Music becomes meaningful to me by imagination. I am seeing things like landscapes, rainy afternoons, the skyline, etc.

Peggie: But Frank, you are going in the wrong direction. Music should not be imagined, it must be an impersonally personal affair. It should arouse pretty much the same emotions in anyone in order to fit it to your frame of reference.

Frank: I don't understand. Is it as complicated as that?

Peggie: It is natural to every intelligent listener.

Critic: I beg your pardon. Intelligence has indeed very little to do with emotional awareness, therefore music cannot be judged on an arbitrary "impersonal" level. The listener has the right to imagine whatever he wants and consequently he must not agree with the "intelligent" music lover.

Peggie: But one cannot go entirely after his own imagination. Even you have theories about colour.

Critic: These are not theories but part of my and a great many people's emotional awareness. Colour is one of the most personal constituents of the imagination. As a music critic it is my duty to appeal to this most suggestive element.

Peggie: But how many of your readers understand phrases like "it is surprising how this pianist applies a basically impressionistic tone technique to the lustrous of other ages"? I perhaps understand it but Frank, do you have an idea what our music critic means by this expression?

Frank: Well, I know little about art, I am perhaps not quite sure what impressionism is, but I believe I would not gain too much if the reviewer would pass value judgments of good and bad. I myself could do this. If I have committed myself to attend concerts I should accept the critic's phraseology, but check on it if I do not understand it.

Peggie: But we have to be critical about the critics. I don't think, Frank, that you care much where they lead you. I know that many of the reviewers' attitudes and accepted styles reflect a sort of intellectual sycophancy by which the critics draw upon a reservoir of clichés and opinions collected over the years of experience in music criticism.

Critic: So what are your reforms for us "intellectual sycophants"?

Peggie: I can only suggest a little originality, a little enthusiasm, even a little heresy. Mind you I am not a connoisseur. I have only ideas. The rest is your job.

Frank: Whom am I to trust, then? Myself, the critic or you, the critic's critic, the so-called non-connoisseur?

Peggie: Do whatever you want, Frank, I leave the problem to you.

perfect end

It is always a privilege to be in the presence of greatness. Marian Anderson's recital at Eaton Auditorium last Thursday was especially gratifying because it was the perfect ending of the concert season.

After warming up on airs by Purcell and Haydn, Miss Anderson, with accompanist Franz Rupp, made perfect duets of five Schubert lieder. An die Musik which is usually delivered with varying degrees of reverence and humility, Miss Anderson turned into a hymn of joyful thanksgiving. Die Allmacht combined brilliant vocalism with deep and stirring religious faith.

Miss Anderson, who used to deliver most of her recitals with closed eyes, little facial expression and no gestures has broadened her art with a greater freedom acquired in her recent venture into the uninhibited realms of opera. Nowhere was this more evident than in Mon Coeur S'Ouvre A Ta Voix.

When Miss Anderson reached the third of her Negro Spirituals, The Crucifixion, she gave us such thrilling low notes and such profound sorrow that I felt that any following number must surely be anticlimactic. I have never been so happy to be wrong. Ride On King Jesus, in contrast with the grief of death, was filled with the exultation of the Resurrection. It was a most fitting close for a truly magnificent concert.

TSO?

The appointment of a new conductor is not the only problem now facing the Toronto Symphony Orchestra; more than this is needed to ensure its continued good health. We are told that people won't come to concerts unless they are attracted by a famous soloist. This, of course, is ridiculous. Music lovers want to hear good performances, and it is only because there has been, for some time past, a greater likelihood of this with a guest soloist present that the audiences for the orchestra alone have been dwindling. All the concerts would be well attended if their quality were consistently high.

In bringing this about, a conductor who can take full command of the musical life of the orchestra is of first importance, but not, in himself, sufficient. Leslie Bell pointed out recently in the Daily Star that the conductor does not always choose the music he is to play, or who is to play it. Under the "present system" traveling soloists "prepare" a concerto or two for a season, and these they are able to play, with a minimum of rehearsal and more or less success, wherever they go. So every year we get the Brahms piano concertos, the Beethoven, Schumann, Grieg or Tchaikovsky, and repeats of the Beethoven, Brahms, Mendelssohn and Tchaikovsky violin concertos.

glee club

The large audience which filled the Great Hall for the last Sunday Evening Concert had a good time listening to the Hart House Glee Club. Ward McAdam has trained his group well, and they respond with zest, precision and fine sound to his firm and competent direction.

The choir is best in quiet, expressive music; its weakness is in the large effect. Thus the Hallelujah, Amen from Handel's Judas Maccabaeus was not as powerful as it could have been, the Russian liturgical chant Hosposi Pomiliu (Lord Have Mercy) less exciting than it is, and Holst's Dirge somewhat rough. But Palestrina's Supplicationes and the other Russian religious number, Tchesnokov's Salvation Belongeth to Our God I found very moving.

Thomas Morley's beautiful April is in my Mistress' Face was sung with a great deal of feeling, as was Robertson's How very dear she was, under assistant conductor Kenneth Davis' direction. McAdam's arrangements of two Scottish songs were well sung. In the second of these, Red Rosey Bush, and in two spirituals, Little Innocent Lamb and Ride the Charlot, Ronald Halfhead was a good tenor soloist.

Appended to an encore, the group went college: baritone Peter Munroe sang a parody of the Toreador Song. A most enjoyable concert, for everyone in the hall.

-in the dark

The Little Fugitive, at present delighting audiences at the International Cinema, was reputedly made by amateurs on an almost-nonexistent budget, but any doubts evoked by that description will be set aside almost from the first reel. This almost documentary tale of a little boy on the loose at Coney Island is one of the finer films of the year.

As the seven-year-old who runs off to Coney Island after a bunch of neighbourhood kids have convinced him he has killed his brother, Richie Andrusco is obviously nothing but himself; you couldn't even say that the directors have evoked a performance from him. But there he is, paddling across the sands collecting coke bottles to pay for his pony rides, struggling furiously with an enormous baseball bat. I can't decide whether such a superb portrait of childhood unaware was made by endless, exasperating reshooting to get the perfect effect, or by catching single fleeting moments. Without a doubt, some very superior editor has had a fine opportunity in choosing the bits and pieces of film that make up this portrait.

The Little Fugitive ignores its plot wherever possible to concentrate on the fleeting adventures of the child himself, and in so doing, records an unforgettable picture of New Yorkers at play on a sunny day. The atmosphere of Coney Island, the fond, strained relationship between Joey and his brother, the indolence of kids sitting around reading comic books, all are impressive factors in this unpretentious production. The Little Fugitive is yet another film in the slowly increasing trend to small-budget, on-the-spot realism in American movies begun with The Quiet One and a worthy addition to the tradition.

Cagers Smother McGill In Season's Last Game

By JOHN WILSON

If you walk into Hart House by the side door, and take a turn to the left, you can get a look at the wealth of silverware collected by the University of Toronto over the years. All sorts of objects are there to arouse the casual observer's curiosity — a tiger cub "captured in Hamilton, November 26, 1910", when the Blues defeated the Tigers 16—7 and won the Grey Cup; and the Governor Smith Trophy, won in Madison Square Garden by the hockey Blues of 1925, and never reclaimed.

Dozens of Intercollegiate championship trophies have collected the dust in the Hart House trophy case in past years, but it's been a long time since the passer-by could see both the Yates Cup and the Queen's Cup side by side in the same year. Winning two major championships and coming within a shade of the third in one athletic term must make this past year one of the greatest ever. But in addition to all the glory on the gridiron, the ice lanes, and in the other fields of Intercollegiate sport, there's something else that will make 1954-55 stand out in the record books as one of the best.

That something else goes far afield from the world of college sport. Seldom before has the spectator been treated to such a vast amount of color and drama in every sphere of athletic endeavour. Just last week-end the Penticton V's grabbed the headlines with a 5—0 victory over Russia, and last fall the Grey Cup final was probably the greatest spectacle ever witnessed in this modern day of football. Dr. Roger Bannister made 1954 a red-letter year cracking the four-minute mile last summer, attaining the goal of countless athletes over the past fifty years.

Last fall's football season was probably the most colorful we'll have the pleasure to see in many a year to come in Intercollegiate competition. It marked the heart-breaking bid of one of the gamest bunch of Golden Gaels that ever donned the Tricolor, and ended with a dramatic clash in London that broke the Western jinx and won the Yates Cup for Varsity. The Mustangs had stunned everyone by pulling their Intercollegiate title out of the fire with a story-book finish against the Gaels just a week earlier.

And after all, when you think about it, that spectacular color that made this year so great is what really counts far more than winning. So we took eleven championships out of twenty-nine, and we'll probably do it again next year; but it's not likely that we'll see such drama in the world of sport for some time to come. It's been real.

Ice Seconds Won Five

By FRED GRAY

Varsity's Intermediate hockey team, faced with the loss of many of last year's big men came up with a well balanced predominantly Freshman squad this winter to collect 5 wins against 2 losses and 2 ties over the season.

Coach Jack Weldrake found a wealth of reinforcements in the grads of last year's U.T.S. senior team with Al Fleming, the smoothy in the Intermediate nets over the schedule, probably the outstanding addition. Others were Don Borthwick, Bill Naylor, and R6n Bertram. Ted Lotocki and Len Morrison from Oakwood Collegiate as well as Dud Kearney and Doug Court were other notable newcomers to the club.

The addition of Queen's University and the strong club iced by Western resulted in a rugged season for the Varsity Second. They started strongly, taking one from both Osgoode and R.M.C. by good margins, but dropped a gruelling contest to the Mustangs down in London by a single point. Back in Toronto the Intermediates tied Ryerson, dropped Osgoode, and lost their second to Western three weeks later, again by a single point. Queen's showed up in Toronto to hold Varsity to a tie. Dropping Ryerson as a warm-up the Intermediates travelled to Kingston to end the season by trouncing the Kingston crew in their own backyard.

Year's Highlight Was Yates Cup

Probably the biggest thing that happened in the world of Intercollegiate sport this past year was the dogged, uphill battle that led to the Yates Cup last fall. As well as winning the football championship, the Blues marked up two other firsts travelling to Vancouver for an East-West game with the University of British Columbia, and finally cracking that eighteen-year jinx in old London.

Hampered by injuries and a tremendous volume of build-up from the press, the Blues had the cups stacked against them from the start, after fighting to a 9-9 tie with the Mustangs in the league opener. That split in points was to cause the most dramatic finish to an Intercollegiate season ever witnessed, and few people would have forecast the outcome after such an unpropitious beginning.

Just about everybody packed it up for the Blues after they suffered a 20-0 setback the next week in Kingston, but the season

Last Saturday night at Hart House the Varsity Blue basketball team terminated their Intercollegiate schedule by trouncing the McGill Redmen, 81—60. The Victory gave the Blues a 6—4 won-lost record for the season. Don Fawcett, playing his last game for Varsity, led the team with 18 points. For McGill, Leon Duplessis, who averaged 18.9 points during the season, was high man, hooping 22. The Blues' final status in the six team league will be determined this Saturday when Assumption and Western play at Windsor.

At the beginning of the year many Blue enthusiasts declared emphatically that the Blues would capture top laurels. The acquisition of Pete Potter, Leo Madden and John Braithwaite from the Tri-Bell club; the return of Don Fawcett after he had spent a year at McMaster, and the return of veterans George Stulac and Art Binnington were enough to vindicate their choice of the Blues as the best.

But the Blues failed, first because of the resignation of Braithwaite, and Stulac, Braithwaite quit because he was forced to spend more time in his post-graduate course of social work. Stulac, on the other hand, quit mysteriously, and many say it was because he no longer had a desire to play.

In practically each game the Blues played their main hopes of winning rested solely on the performance of their guards Madden, Fawcett and Potter. Each of these, obviously not lacking the spirit, and required basketball know-how, gave their unlimited energy towards success.

The first string pivot men, Al Vaichulis and Binnington, played consistently, rebounding and shooting well on several occasions.

The Blues' failure to top the league therefore, could not be attributed to any of the players. What seemed to stop the Blues, was their inability to shoot well when the chips were on the table.

For instance, when they were on the road trying to win their alternate night games from Assumption and Western, their floor play was so poor that they couldn't win under any conditions.

Soccer, Track Win Fall Titles

The fall scene in Intercollegiate activity was dominated by the triple win of the soccer teams, and the blazing victory in the Senior track meet.

Led by Norm Williams and Dick Harding the Blues waltzed to another crown in the cinder sport, while the Senior soccer team won the eastern and western titles, and the Intermediates won their league championship.

Intermediate football enjoyed a medium season, losing two to Western, but retaining the Shaw trophy, which was not competed for. Still on the football field, the rugged Blues dropped a close one to McGill in Montreal, and then lost out to the Barbarians in the city final by a single try.

Blue sailors had an easy time of it, regaining the Colonel Grant trophy after a year's layoff, when RMC were hosts to the Intercollegiate meet.

Led by Ken Lawson and Robin Arnold the tennis team placed second, to the University of Montreal, while the intermediate tournament was foregone for another year.

Senior and Intermediate golfers placed third in their respective meets early in the fall term, while the water polo Blues rounded out the autumn activity missing the Herschorn Trophy by only a few goals.

Well, another season has almost come and gone and what exactly have we to show to the world? That is a good question. At this point in the year one hardly cares less, for it seems more a problem of finding the easiest way to jump off the Bloor Street bridge.

All the world may be filled with gloom and essays; however, coming through the darkness, there is some light of pleasure in looking back over the year and seeing that it was not all a waste of time and valuable lectures.

Probably the brightest ray of light came to this campus when Sidney Smith announced in his yearly report that the females of this campus were at last to have an Athletic Building. No longer is this a dream of every girl on the campus, but rather an actuality. It will certainly be a pleasure to sit back and watch those smug Hart House types drool over a pool and gym facilities that slightly outclass those that the men have enjoyed for so long.

With a new building, women's sports will get that much needed boost and who knows, with more enthusiasm and interest, which will be the natural result of the erection of this edifice, Toronto might cop a few more intercollegiate crowns. Somehow this year, we just did not seem to click too much on the idea of coming home with most of the bacon, for all Varsity could do was to capture the Intercollegiate Badminton and Tennis Championships.

Not that winning two intercollegiate crowns is anything to be little, but rather, let us put it the Blues from making it a closer game."

What Clark said was equally applicable to two other of the Blue defeats. When the Blues played against Western here just recently, and lost 86-81, they lost because of their inability to shoot well at the beginning of the game. The bad shooting was caused, in part, by the tall Mustangs who were rushing our shooters. The other Blue loss, incurred because of poor shooting, occurred in Kingston against Queen's, the score being 69-61.

In their victories on the other hand the Blues burst out with the potentialities that they lacked in their losses. Varsity easily took McGill and McMaster twice each

This way—Toronto did not live up to its usual supremacy. What makes matters worse, is that Western beat us to the draw by hogging three of those first place standings.

In the fall, we started off in the usual burst of enthusiasm and optimism, but along the way we lost some of this eager-beaver-ness and hope. Guelph was the first institution to take the starch out of our endeavours by winning the Intercollegiate Archery championships, but we came back in the tennis trials to out-star the other colleges in the net tournaments. In swimming, we came second to Western. For the fall activities, this made an average of one out of three titles.

The winter season has come and we managed to do just the same in that semester as we did in the autumn—one victory out of three. At least, we can console ourselves by saying we are consistent. We started off on the right foot by running away with the badminton honours; so it looked as if Toronto was well on her way to intercollegiate honours; however, things were not meant to be that way.

When it came to volleyball, we fared poorly, for we did not even retain our 1954 standing, but with basketball although we did not come home with the bronze baby, Toronto certainly gave Western a tussle.

Even if 1954-55 was not the queen of championships, we certainly had fun and after all that is the main point in sports. At this time, we would like to thank Jane Kelly, Jo Housley, Peggy Cain, and Norma Walsh for stories well done and also Miss Slack for her valuable assistance.

CUP All-Stars

The first and second Canadian University Press all-star basketball teams were picked by a poll of the basketball writers of the five college newspapers of the Intercollegiate league. Assumption, having no newspaper, did not vote.

First Team — Guards—Don Fawcett (V), George Joseph (A); Forwards—Paul Fedor (Q), Chris Ellis (W), Ray Monnot (W).

Second Team — Guards—Mel Mickalackhi (McG) Bob Purcell (Q); Forwards—Leon Duplessis (McG), Coulter Osborne (W), Jim Shephard (M).

Tribe Falls, 8-4

Playing his best game this season, big Dave Reid hammered three goals past McGill's Bernie Wong, to lead the hockey Blues to an 8-4 win in the final game of the season last Friday night.

Goals by Don Cossar, Paul Knox and John Adams and two more by Ross Woods rounded out the victory for the Blues, enabling them to finish the most perfect season ever recorded in the twelve-game Intercollegiate schedule. The Blues won eleven and tied one for 23 points, to bring the Queen's Cup back to Varsity for the first time since 1951.

A sure, impenetrable defence kept McGill scoreless in the opening frame, while the Blues shot into a 3-0 lead on tallies by Knox and Reid. McGill had trouble getting out of their own end until more than halfway through the period, but three dangerous thrusts were foiled by R. J. Gray who played the entire game between the pipes for the Varsity club.

Fiery Dick Baltzan struck for the first Tribe counter seconds after the opening of the middle stanza, firing a low shot past Gray from inside the blueline. Gord Currie, Jack McMullen, and Herb English also scored in this period, but Cossar, Reid and Woods maintained the Blue margin with three goals in three minutes, peppering the disorganized McGill defence from all directions. Wong got little protection in the nets from a shaky defensive corps, while Pete Constable was the only forward making an effort at backchecking.

Reid's best effort of the night went amiss in the dying moments of the period, after breaking through the Tribe's defence. Shooting wide, he tumbled into the boards after being tripped by Gord Currie, sustaining a bruised shoulder.

Johnny Adams fired one home at the eight-minute mark of the third for his first goal of the league season, and Woods got the final at 18:26.

McGill appeared much less potent than in their last visit here, when the Blues whitewashed them 4-0, but still provided good opposition as the Varsity crew hung up their skates on a successful season.

Trinity Bows To UC III's Irish Shut Out Jr. Vic 2-0

By TOM JOHN

U.C. III qualified for the Inter-fac. hockey final against St. Mike's A, yesterday, eliminating Trinity A, 5-3, in a bruising semi-final. The final series, a best-two-out-of-three affair, begins Friday at 12:30, with the second game Monday.

Scott and Dysart, with two goals each, led the Redmen attack, while Wansborough capped a strong defensive game by firing the fifth U.C. marker into an empty Panther net, just two seconds before the end.

Lovering fired two goals and Church one, to spark the Trinity crew.

After a scoreless first period, U.C. opened the scoring at 6:14 of the second, Scott firing the first of his two, from Dysart. Trinity came right back to tie at 8:03 of the same frame, Lovering counting from McTaggart.

However, two markers by Dysart, one at the end of the second and the other early in the third, gave the Redmen a seemingly insurmountable margin.

The high flying St. Mike's A hockey team crossed its final hurdle in an attempt to capture the intramural hockey laurels as they nipped Jr. Vic 2-0 on Monday at Varsity Arena. It was a lacklustre affair as both teams were content to check their opponents closely.

Paul Legge and John Halligan fired the Irish goals. At times they were checked to a standstill by the Irish. The Irish received five penalties. On four of those, the checking of Glinona, Wadsworth, Shepherd and Reddall kept the Vic team from getting a single shot on the Irish net. Jack Andrews got his sixth shutout of the season.

For the Irish, DeCarlo, Kostyk, Lawless, Frennette, Drolet, O'Neill, Stock and Horvat played well.

McLean, Gee, Allport, Ebenhardt and Johns played well for a losing cause. Tanner played a good game in the Vic nets.

Jack Kennedy, who successfully guided the Blues to the Intercollegiate championship, his first as Head Hockey Coach at Varsity.

CUP All-Stars

The first and second Canadian University Press all-star hockey teams were picked by a poll of the hockey writers of the four college newspapers of the Intercollegiate league.

First Team — Goal — Cy Guevrement (M); Defence — Dave Stephen (V), Gerard Houle (M); Forwards — Paul Knox (V), Dave Reid (V), Robert Lafreniere (L).

Second Team — Goal, Bernie Wong (McG); Defence — Dave Jackson (V), Ron Robertson (McG); Forwards — Clare Fisher (V), Don Cossar (V), Herb English (McG).

Queen's Cup Champions

It's been a long time since such a great team as this year's edition of the Blues has graced the ice lanes in Varsity Arena. Playing through a twelve-game league schedule the Blues racked up eleven wins and one tie, and won three, tied three and lost two in eight exhibition games. They brought home three chunks of silverware, the Queen's Cup, McGill's Winter Carnival trophy, and the championship award from RPI's fourth invitation tournament.

Pre-season tilts with the OHA Junior 'A' Marlboros and St. Mike's boded well for the future, as the Blues drew twice with the Dukes, and dropped a close 5-4 decision to the Double Blue. The only other loss of the season came just a week later, as the Varsity club bowed 4-3 to the East York Lyndhursts, last year's representatives to the World Hockey Championships.

Breezing through the first three games of the league schedule the Blues walloped the Carabins 7-2, laced McGill 9-1, and then overpowered Laval 5-2, before taking time out for the trip to New York.

Playing under the American rules, the Blues won all three games with RPI, Yale, and St. Francis Xavier, and then tied the powerful St. Lawrence sextet 3-3 a week later.

Now in the home stretch, with little blocking their way, the Varsity crew nearly ran into a stumbling block in Verdun, when the Carabin team held them to a 1-1 draw. Interest became inferent as the approaching game with the McGill Redmen in Toronto appeared to be the turning point in both teams' bid for the title.

But the Tribe faded miserably before the Blue onslaught, and went under 4-0, as the Blues appeared unable to make a mistake. One week later in Montreal the Seniors clinched the title by edging the Redmen 4-3 in the feature attraction to McGill's Winter Carnival, and then coasted to a 5-2 triumph over the Carabins in Verdun, their first in six years.

Now it's all over and they're talking about the Olympics and World Championship hockey. Making such excellent representatives of the University, there is no reason why the Blues wouldn't make even better representatives of Canada, and the next step could be a trip to Europe for the Blue and White.

Three In Seven Is Winter Total

The University of Toronto took three Intercollegiate championships out of a possible seven in winter sport this past season. The netmen swamped all comers for the badminton title in Kingston, and the fencers swept by McGill to regain their crown. But by far the most impressive was the brilliant victory of Cressy McCatty's swimmers in the Intercollegiate meet in Toronto.

A strong team led by George Stulac, Bibi Stipetic, Bill McIlroy and John Bate managed to upset the McGill Redmen and capture the Dougall Trophy. Leading the Tribe by only a few points going into the final race, the Blues streaked home with a victory in the 400 yard relay to win the meet with a total of 42 points. The Intermediates indicated Varsity's future in the water is in good shape, literally smothering their only opposition, the Western Colts, by a count of 64-13.

The badminton team won all but one match while retaining the Jemmet Trophy in February, and the Walters Trophy was snatched from under McGill's nose with a 15-12 fencing victory.

The wrestling, boxing, ski and squash teams fared not so well, missing their titles by a hair's breadth in most cases. John Whyte and Harry Nightingale were the only Blue champions in the fisticuff sport, while the Blues took three individual titles in wrestling. The squash team missed the boat by four matches, bowing to a powerful McGill squad while splitting 5-5 in ten games, and the skier's placed third at McGill's annual Winter Carnival. Three in seven — not a bad average at that.

Irish B's, Pre-Meds, SPS Seniors Victors In Early B-ball Playoffs

Intramural playoff basketball has proceeded and thus far all the victors have won thus far. Through the process of sudden-death elimination the stronger teams have been separated from the weaker ones. The games being played from to-day on should be the ones to see. Complete schedules are posted in the rotunda of the athletic wing of Hart House.

On Monday a strong St. Mike's B team overran their weaker SPS VII A opponents, 52-30. Led by the excellent shooting of John Robinson who scored 18, and the rebounding of Mike Syron, St. Mike's outscored and outplayed Skule in each period. St. Mike's other high scorer was Carmen Catalfamo with fourteen. For SPS the high scorers were Marv Larsen and George Holm each with six.

Cagers Smother-

and triumphed over Assumption and Queen's once each.

The Blues' high scorer this year was Fawcett who averaged 15.8 points a game. The next highest were Madden and Potter with 10.9 and 9.6 respectively.

In the Intermediate basketball loop the Blue rinky dinks walked away with only half of a championship cup. They will share the trophy with Western.

The principal Baby Blue scorers were John Dacyszyn and Jerry Wojdon. The team consisted of many of equal playing ability. As a result all members saw an equal amount of action, and consequently, it would be difficult to choose any particular standouts other than the two mentioned.

With Love and Affection

Time was when you could recognize a banker when you saw one. Today, he looks like everyone else. And the smile never leaves his face. Of course, if you're overdrawn, the smile may grow faint, and if you miss a loan payment, the smile may be hard to find. But it's an improvement over the days when the banker advanced down Main Street looking as if he expected you to touch him for a nickel, and if you stuck out your hand, would bite off your arm up to the elbow.

In the telepathic way these things happen, you may even be conscious of the fact that the Royal Bank, through its advertising in the "Varsity", is making goo-goo eyes at you, hoping to draw you into the Royal fold. We confess we like having Varsity students as customers. You may be a small, sub-marginal depositor now, but times will change after graduation. And who knows? The day may come when you'll want to use us in a big way. There are four branches near Varsity—Yonge & Bloor, Yonge & College, Harbord & Spadina, and Spadina & College. The Royal Bank of Canada.

The St. Mike's C's, on the other hand, were dumped by Pre-Meds, 37-28. All of the Pre-Med men shared in their team's scoring. Pete Davidson was his team's high scorer with thirteen, Ed Igar of St. Mike's hooped fourteen.

A persistent, aggressive Senior SPS team started a scoring spree in the last period against Pre-Dents and won, 50-35. The high scorers were the two tall centre men, Dave Creery of Dents and Don Ottaway of Skule, on whom their respective teams depended for scoring punch and rebounding. Creery scored twelve points compared to ten for Ottaway.

Last week, Law A and Senior Vic, also emerged as winners. Law A, boasting the presence of two all stars, Jack Iwanicki and Ted Luck, eliminated the U.C. IV's, 43-27. Iwanicki was the driving force in the Law victory as he hooped 18 points. For U.C. Sid Weinrib was high with nine.

Senior Vic bowed to SPS V 51-38. Vic's high scorer was Jim McIntyre with 15 and for Skule Harold Seegmiller led the way with twelve. Of the four Engineering clubs entered in the playoffs two survived, those of Junior and Senior Skule. Of these two Junior Skule has long been favoured to win the Sifton Cup. It would be an oddity to see a final match between Junior and Senior Skule.

Stulac Wins Biggs Trophy

George Stulac, one of Varsity's best known and most versatile athletes, last night was declared the 1955 winner of the Biggs Trophy, awarded annually by the University of Toronto Athletic Association for leadership, sportsmanship, and performance during a candidate's undergraduate athletic career.

During his years at Varsity, Stulac has excelled at swimming, aiding the Blues in their victory in this year's Intercollegiate meet. Best-known on the basketball floor, where he has been a stand-out performer for the Blues for two seasons, George turned his efforts to football last fall, and enjoyed an excellent year as end on the Yates Cup Champion Blue squad.

Four Engineers won positions on the Athletic Directorate in elections held Monday afternoon: Don Cossar, Earl Ford, Dick Harding, and Bobby Waugh last-ed the two-hour balloting. Hockey captain Dave Stephen took the fifth spot.
